THE GYMNAST.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY JOHNNIE DABB.

Dangerous? yes, a little; you see a man might slip and fall,
And a fall from sixty feet, or so, would not be pleasant at all.
When I commenced it? Let me see—'twas about twelve years ago,
I was a youngster, wild and free, about ten years old, or so.

At the circus, one night, I saw the man, with the big Italian name,
Go swinging about on his ropes and bars; thinks I, I can do that same;
So I rigged me up a small affair in the stable loft, at home,
And after a little practice there I thought of the opera's dome.

At a circus first I put in my face as Signor Von Ballero,
And I made a big sensation, too, for a stranger man to do.
Dizzy? Oh, no; you see, sir, I am used to being up there,
And I sit above on my high trapeze as easy as you in your chair.

My mate and I look down below at the upturned faces there,
We laugh to ourselves as we fly across, and see them shrink with fear.
Wife? never had one; though all admire, I never found one to love;
I am smiled upon by ladies fair as I climb to my perch above.

And I smile on them, as they smile on me, then go and forget them all;
But there's one in our company just suits me—we'er going to settle this fall.
Well, sir, good bys, call round again—I guess you'll find us all right—
We open up about 8 o'clock—come around and see us to-night.

ON THE BRINK;
OR,
THE SECRET NOTE AT THE DANCE.

Mrs. Eva Forrester was in a quandary. If she should go to Mr. and Mrs. Blanchard's fete, her husband would be left to his own diversions during her absence. Jealousy was one of Mrs. Forrester's besetting failings; if she should stay at home and watch him, she would be giving up to him, for she had said that go she would, and he had declared that he would not go.

"Blanchard cheated me," her husband said, angrily. "He owes me to-day two or three thousand pounds, which he would pay if he had a spark of honor in him, though the law does not compel him. But no; he has speculated, risen up again, and has built a mansion; now he is going to have a house-warming, and has the impudence to invite me. It isn't proper for you to go."

"It is never proper for me to go when I want to go," protested the wife. "It isn't my fault if the laws do not protect you. I should think that you wonderful men who can rule the world in such a grand way, without the help of women, would make some sort of law about paying debts. Everybody is going to this fete, many to whom Blanchard owed money as well as he did you, and it is to be the most splendid affair of the season. There will be boats on the pond, and tents on the lawn, with fruit untold, and a dinner, a dance and a supper. I must lose these, because, ten years ago, he failed, and in your debt! I shan't do it."

"And I shan't go!" retorted the husband. "If you go it must be alone."

"Very well!" said Mrs. Forrester, and, tossing her head, went out of the breakfast room, where this dialogue had taken place, and began to turn over her wardrobe to make a selection for the fete.

James would come round when he knew that she was really going. But James didn't come round, and here it was the day before and he wouldn't go and she would. She concluded that she must, for, aside from showing him that she meant to have her way, it was impossible to think of not displaying that beautiful crimson silk dress on the very first chance.

To be sure, it was awful to go without her husband, still more to go with her sister, Mrs. Clark, who would be her chaperon; but go she would. Mr. Forrester said not another word. He was as pleasant as usual, and he was generally a very pleasant man when he had his own way.

When at noon luncheon his wife appeared resplendent in a red silk dress, with low neck and jewels scarcely hidden by the little jacket she was to wear till evening, and with her hair superbly rolled and puffed, he only said:—

"My dear, you look remarkably well," and seemed to take for granted that the attire was assumed for his especial delectation.

She pouted, returned no answer, and made a great show of being in a hurry and of listening to the sound of every carriage-wheel that rolled along the street. But he would ask no questions. She would have given something if Mrs. Clark had driven up before James went out, but she did not; he went without a word of good-bye, though she was to be gone all night—the cruel wretch!

Mrs. Clark came the minute he was out of sight—some people never do come at the right moment—and Mrs. Forrester had hard work to be smiling.

"Wasn't your husband sorry that you should go without him?" the horrid old woman asked.

"Oh, very sorry!" exclaimed Mrs. Forrester: "but he is so anxious that I should have all the pleasure I can. He, poor dear, is completely immersed in business. He hasn't failed and paid a shilling in the pound—ha ha! so he must work. However, we let by-gones be by-gones; and, indeed, Mrs. Blanchard is very civil. When I told her that, as you intended to return home directly after dinner, I should miss the dancing, she insisted on my staying all night."

"Are you going to do so?" Mrs. Clark asked, with a faint air of disapproval.

"I am, certainly," replied Mrs. Forrester quite decidedly.

She wasn't going to tell people that she and James quarrelled, not she. If she thought that he was a wretch and told him so, she did not mean to enlighten others on the point

They reached Blanchard Place in due time. It was a fine estate, a mile or two from the town in which Mr. and Mrs. Forrester had taken up a temporary summer residence, and on this glorious September day was as beautiful as a picture.

The turf was green velvet, but here and there a tree or vine was red, gold, or purple with autumn, and lighted up the landscape like a torch. The pond was gay with boats, the lawn with gaily dressed people, and all went merry as a marriage-bell.

The Blanchards were very polite to Mrs. Forrester, and grieved that business had prevented her husband from accompanying her. They quite distinguished her, and complimented her as the handsomest lady there. Perhaps they remembered the three thousand pounds; she certainly did not forget it.

When Mrs. Anne Trask called her attention to the beauty of the conservatories she sighed and said:—

"Ah, yes; and my dear, poor James' money built them. I really feel as if they were mine."

When Mr. Clare, an old admirer of Mrs. Forrester's, on whose arm she took a long promenade that afternoon, groaned as he looked at the charming place and said, "It is like a view of Paradise to Adam after he was turned out. We poor bachelors look at the wives and the houses of other men, and sigh in vain." Mrs. Forrester laughed and said:—

"Why don't you fall? Then all your friends can contribute the house and land, and the wife will come of herself. Such a place as this would be an inducement to any girl."

For if woman who was inclined to be jealous of her husband Mrs. Forrester certainly carried on quite a game that afternoon with Mr. Charles Clare. He was very attentive and gallant, and she was very complaisant and evinced no indisposition to a little flirting. She enjoyed it immensely.

Serve James right for not coming! He could look at other women, and make them sweet speeches—she knew he did—and she would show him that two could play that game. The only thing wanting to a perfect enjoyment of the situation was that James should see the whole. It wouldn't do half as well if she told him, because he might think that she was doing it to make him jealous. She almost hoped that some one would notice, and warn him, and think that was horrid.

Charles Clare was going to remain all night, too, he told her. He had been assisting the Blanchards in preparing this affair, and was going to stay. Should he have the pleasure of driving her over the next morning? The wicked creature was delighted. Yes, she was much obliged. Would he please to go early, for she wanted to see James before he went out in the morning?

The real meaning of the request was that she wanted James to see her driving up to the door with Charles Clare, in his carriage, and see Charles help her out in that graceful, devoted way of his. Wouldn't she smile on her escort and make believe she did not see who was looking out of the window! She would teach James Forrester to let her go off alone and never care what became of her. He should know what jealousy was.

The afternoon passed delightfully, and the dinner was a success.

"You really think that you will stay all night?" Mrs. Clark asked, putting her head into a charming tete a tete between Mrs. Forrester and her old lover.

"Oh yes! it is quite decided!" said Eva, shortly

"Flirting thing!" muttered Mrs. Clark, turning away. "I shouldn't wonder if she came on purpose to see Mr. Clare."

Just as the dancing began a boy inquired at the open window of the parlor for Mrs. Forrester.

"She is dancing there with Mr. Clare," Mrs. Clark said.

Mrs. Clark was just about going, and was annoyed that she must go alone. She wanted some one to abuse her host and hostess too, all the way home, and she must bottle it all till the next day.

"There's a note for her," the boy said, and, having given it, vanished.

Mrs. Clark delighted in mystery and melodrama. This was so charming, the mysterious message, the tragical-looking note, the fact of any note at all having come Then, when she had breathlessly sought out Eva Forrester, and given her the note, hoping that it contained bad news, and had watched her tear it open, the expression of her face when she read it added to the charm of the situation.

The lady turned first red, then white; then she declared she must go home at once.

"Is Mr. Forrester ill?" her comforter inquired.

"Not very well, that is all," Eva replied, as calmly as she could. "He can't do without me if he has a sore finger or a toothache."

Charles Clare scowled. To be sure Eva's flirtation with him had consisted in the most outrageous praises of her husband, and description of the happiness of their lives; but then he wanted to drive her to town and make her husband a little jealous, if possible.

He had to resign himself, however, and lead her to Mrs. Clark's carriage, and see her drive away into the starry night. The contents of the note were these lines:—

"If Mrs. Forrester knew with whom her husband spends his time while she is gone she would not stay away long, certainly not over night."

Of course there was no name signed. Of course that note would have taken Eva Forrester home over red-hot ploughshares. Mrs. Clark found her a very dull companion, and could get no satisfaction from her concerning her husband's sudden illness.

"Leave me at the side door," said Eva, when they drew near the hotel where Mr. and Mrs. Forrester were staying.

"Why, my dear, your rooms are on the other side," Mrs. Clark said.

"But I will stop here," the young woman said decidedly,

If James was at home, he should not hear a carriage drive up, and look out and see that it was she.

It was ten o'clock, for the drive had taken them some time. The young wife's heart burned with a fierce and deadly jealousy as she glided noiselessly through the long lighted entries. She did not know who to be jealous of, for her husband had, after all, done nothing to point out any person. Her vexations had been vague and as nothing, but now a terrible reality stood before her. She had realised, thinking the matter over on the way home, that in truth she had been the happiest of women till that night, and that, though she had pretended to be jealous, it was all a pretence.

Never till now had she known that agonized contraction of the heart which comes when proof of misery is at hand. Her head was in a whirl, though she was outwardly cool. She was fit for anything. What she would do to him she knew not; but, as for the woman who dared to lure her husband away from her, she should die.

She passed swiftly through the hall, went into a side passage, and down to the street at the back of the hotel. An apothecary's shop was at the corner there. She was known there, and had no difficulty in procuring what she wanted. After a minute she went back to the hotel, with a bottle in her hand.

A light shone under the door of her room. He was at home! She stopped for a minute to take breath, then softly tried the lock. Of course it was fastened, she thought. But no, it yielded to her touch and she entered without a sound.

The entry and parlor lights were dim, but from the open door of the sleeping-room came a flood of light. She crossed the room, and stood on the threshold. Horror of horrors! A woman lay in her bed, asleep, with her face turned away; a white hand drooped over the side of the bed, and a flood of fair hair streamed over the pillow. Eva Forrester's nerves seemed changed to wires of steel. She only glanced round, to make sure that no one else was in the room; she softly approached the bed, the bottle clasped tightly in her hand. A table was drawn up to the bedside, and on it was placed a vase of flowers and a smelling bottle.

With her hand resting on the table, Eva bent forward to see the face of her rival. It was a sweet and lovely face, scarcely the one that might be looked for in a woman who would be found in such a situation.

"Wretch!" she muttered, taking a step nearer, but at the same time she heard her husband coming.

"Why, who is here?" exclaimed a lady's voice at the door.

Another [illegible] Mrs. Forrester turned her head and saw Mrs. Marvin, the lady who occupied the suite of rooms next her own. The lady stood looking at her in astonishment. Their acquaintance was too slight to warrant such a visit on either side.

"Why, how in the world happened you to come into my rooms?" cried Mrs. Marvin, too much surprised to be very polite.

"Your rooms?"

Eva looked about her. Sure enough she was in the wrong room! After explanations and apologies, Mrs. Forrester gathered up her wrap, which had dropped on the floor as she entered, and sought her own apartment, but not with a light heart. She might find something as bad there. Mrs. Marvin's sister had arrived only that night; but perhaps she was not the only new-comer in the house.

A light under the door here, too. She made sure that she had the right door; and again the lock yielded to her hand. Again the dim light in the parlor, and the bright light beyond. This time Mrs. Forrester looked about the room. Yes, that was her furniture, and the canary gave a sleepy warble as she entered. She went to the bedroom door, and, with a thickly beating heart, stood on the threshold. No flood of fair hair and no white hand were there to wring her heart; but a brown haired head on the pillow and a pair of brown eyes open and looking at her.

"Won't you lock the parlor door, Eva!" her husband asked, sleepily.

She stared, and tried to recover herself.

"Why didn't you look it?" she asked.

"I left it open for you," he replied.

"But I said that I should stay all night!" she exclaimed.

"I didn't think you would, dear, after you received that note," he remarked, coolly.

"That note!" she cried.

"Yes; didn't it bring you though?"

He couldn't help smiling.

"James, what do you mean?" his wife asked, breathlessly coming to the bedside, having hidden the fatal vial in her pocket.

He stretched out his hand, and, drawing a little stand nearer, took from it the fac-simile of the note she had received.

"I couldn't bear to have you away from me so long," he signed.

Then, as she burst into tears, half of joy, half of terror for the awful crime she had only just escaped. He put his arm round her.

"Forgive me, dear!" he said tenderly. "It was a cruel jest. I didn't think you would take it so hard."

It was some time before she was quite calm, having told him all her story, not omitting the vial, frightening him nearly to death. He learned by that never to tease his wife with making her jealous again. A word was no play and no weapon for a man to use.

They were quite reconciled at length and happier than ever.

"But I did flirt awfully with Charles Clare," she said penitently.

"So I saw," her husband answered, dryly.

"You saw?" then, with a glad laugh. "Oh, sir, I have caught you! You didn't mean me to know, and you really cared enough for me to follow me, you darling James?"

"Well, to tell the truth, I havn't been home ten minutes," he had to own.

THE SHAH'S HARAM.

So many fanciful things have been said and written regarding the harem and its connections, that the curious on such matters are at a loss what to believe and what to conjecture. During the time I remained at Ispahan I devoted all my leisure hours to the investigation of the harem and its secrets, and I think that I am in a position to tender a brief but interesting account of this mysterious institution. From the lips of a woman, a vender of trinkets at the palace, most of my information was gained, she appearing to answer every question of mine with spiteful gusto, probably from jealousy or avarice. There are stewards, secretaries, treasurers, guards, &c., in the outer palace, studying day and night how best to govern the intrigues of the fair beauties in the inner sanctum. There are three ranks of women in the harem—the Begum, Canum and Katun, or princesses of the blood-royal, the mistresses and the slaves. The guards hold the most important offices in and about the harem, and are divided into three grades—first, those who are placed at the outer gates and never come within sight of the women; second, the blacks from the coasts of Malabar, who act as messengers; and the third, composed of women commanded by some antiquated matron, who receives orders direct from the prince himself. Most of the ladies are Georgian and Circassian women of low birth, but from the description of two they must possess rare charms. There are three European ladies in the harem at present, one from Paris and two English blondes. From all accounts it is not the life of roses we have been led to believe; the rules are severely strict, and the punishment for the slightest offence is carried to an extreme point. It is said that Abbas II, finding that his favorite had deceived him in a trifling matter, ordered a fire to be made, and caused her to be burnt in his presence. As the ladies follow the king to his other palaces, or to camp in time of war, they travel at night, guarded by a troop of cavalry, who are directed to keep every male exceeding the age of seven years at a proper distance. From all accounts many would gladly return to their homes, and are the poor caged birds who sigh for their mountains and the green fields of their youth, longing to escape from the prison life their position forces them to lead. My informant tells me that there is one favorite, one special pet among them, upon whom, for her beauty, voice and wit, the prince showers all his caresses; how weary must the rest be, singing, dancing, or playing before him they loathe yet fear, forced to contribute to the pleasures of their hated rival. Happy is she whom the king admires, and can make him believe she has an equal passion for him. I cannot further enlarge upon this delicate subject, and therefore close this paragraph with the hope that the moral of its purport may prove an apology for touching upon this feature of Persia's shame.

AN EARLY QUIBBLE.—George.—"There, Aunt Mary! what do you think of that? I drew the horse, and Ethel drew the jockey?" Aunt Mary.—"H'm! But what would mamma say to your drawing jockeys on a Sunday?" George.—"Ah! but look here! We've drawn him Riding to Church, you know!"

"ON THE BRINK."
With her hand resting on the table, Eva bent forward to see the face of her rival.

DRIFTING.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY CLAUDE DE HAVEN.

Drifting along, this human barque,
Freighted with manhood, love and woe;
Drifting along with shadows dark,
Our pilot and captain, the deadliest foe;
Drifting along o'er fields of green,
The ripened harvest and new mown hay;
Drifting along with the setting sun,
From early morn till close of day.

Drifting along with a weary life,
Encouraged by phantasy—never there,
Drifting along with care and strife,
To build our castles in the air:
Drifting along from our childhood's home,
From the cheery glow of a mother's love,
Drifting along contented to roam,
Painting pen pictures as onward we move.

Drifting along on the treacherous sand
By the shadowy beach that meets the wave—
Drifting along to that distant land,
For the tide of life has waited to save;
Drifting along with sin and remorse,
A saddened heart and prostrate form,
Drifting along a lifeless corse,
We are drifting to Him who shelters from harm.

LYNDON'S OATH.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY DON JUAN.

"I tell you, woman, you must be mine! Willing or unwilling, you shall yield to me. I have loved you too long and too ardently to thus give you up. You are aware of the power you possess over me; how your slightest touch, the softest tone of your voice thrills my whole being; how forcibly even a parting glance is treasured; you know no other woman had ever the slightest attraction for me; that I would lay down my life for you, and yet my reward is to be a cold 'let us be friends.' By heaven, it is too much! I will not endure it! You are mistaken if you think I will bear it tamely! You have driven me to desperation, and I tell you again you must be mine, or——"

"Do you dare to threaten?" and ineffable scorn rang in the clear, low voice. "Then, indeed, I have been mistaken; I believed you to be a gentleman, but since you have proved otherwise, our acquaintance ends here."

"Does it? We shall see, I fancy. Listen! You must be mine. If you will marry me, well—if not, I will ruin you forever. Your name shall be a jest and a by-word among men, a warning and a reproach among women. Oh! revenge is sweet; I shall glory in the knowledge that I was the cause of your degradation; that you suffer for a crime of which you are innocent, and which your soul abhors."

"Are you a fiend?"

"What I am you have made me. I give you a week to decide."

"Take your answer now! Sooner will I be the bride of death than yours. Sooner seek his dark domains than your loathed embrace."

"Not so fast; you may change your mind when you hear all. I can ruin you so easily. The only a word here, a smile or knowing look there, a meaning silence somewhere else, and the thing is done; and I will do it, too, if you persist in your insane refusal. You think of that milksop lover of yours. Bah! he will be one of the first to turn against you; no breath of scandal must sully the fair fame of a minister's wife! But this is not all; after this you shall yet be mine. I have sworn it. Judge if of the harem and its secrets, and I think that I am in a position to tender a brief but interesting account of this mysterious institution. From the lips of a woman, a vender of trinkets at the palace, most of my information was gained, she appearing to answer every question of mine with spiteful gusto, probably from jealousy or avarice. "Thank God for you, at least, know I have told the truth."

It is useless to dwell on this story, as the dramatis personæ are all living. Leona has won for herself a name and powerful friends. She does not fear Lyndon now, though blonde tresses still grace her beautiful head; and as, day after day, he reads fresh encomiums on her professional success, he grinds his teeth in impotent rage and thinks of the desperate game he played—and lost.

THE MAID'S REFRAIN.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY VICTOR PARTON.

I am not satisfied! My life was peaceful as an humble, untraversed lake in times of drought. I knew no sorrow, nor e'en the ecstacy of blissful pain.

My home was quiet, my cares but shadows, my tasks but slight and far within my reach; my friends but few, and they untroubled. With them and me, the weather and the crops, a newly shingled barn, the use of dress or Parson B's last sermon, were constant topics and our chief gossip.

And so I glided on, content. An old, old story, I do not doubt, and tame enough perhaps. If I am wearisome pray pass me by. I like to talk of this.

An oft invited guest, he came not suddenly nor unannounced, nor did he seek by startling phrases to once disturb the evenness of "home." He brought no marvels from abroad, nor theories to vex. But there was brightness in his soul, and a rich intelligence that seemed to strengthen me and my surroundings, strong as I felt before. If there was sadness in him, it was manifest by one exterior, a never ceasing and sincere respect for all he saw about him.

To give some joy to every one; this was his constant effort or his second nature. My father called him "son," and "sir" and "friend," by turns, mingling warm tributes of affection with an almost childlike admiration. Although he moved about unconscious of himself, my mother once mistook and called him "father," then dropped her lashes and blushed and fled; when he, pursuing, kissed her aged brow so tenderly and said so pleasantly: "'Tis well, be not ashamed, call me old fellow or patriarch, or Mother Goose, or what you will; more than you think, you honor me; more than I deserve, you compliment me; don't mind, there is no harm;" that she looked up quite merrily and kissed him in return, and ever more was wont to counsel with him and to feel much pleased when he was near.

And then he made the little joke go round amongst us at his own expense, saying he felt quite proud to be the father of so fine a family.

Ah! me! this girlish prattle is not wise, but all these things are dear sometimes. The noisiest, unshod boy that e'er perplexed what folks call husbandry, sought him for a friend. He'd listen to the idlest tale as though it had much import; and when he joined in rural sports he was no stranger. The staidest farmer said he had much wisdom; and many women called him beautiful. He ne'er was stared at as new comers are, nor did he e'er excite improper curiosity.

To me he seemed a member of the household, begat without confusion, and retained without a question.

One day we found him in the generous act of really sawing wood for a poor workman's wife, a mile removed, and when we praised his goodness he said all praise belonged alone to her for giving him the means to exercise himself and charging nothing.

And this he said, sincerely, without a tinge of affectation or ignoble zeal. For two whole days he helped the harvesters to gather in the grain, and none discovered in him that unfitness which I saw. He made himself beloved by cattle even, imparting fresh intelligence to each, and favored cows (of all things in the world!) awaited his approach and sported with him as I supposed a cow could never do.

He [illegible] and [illegible] with [illegible] their ears and feed them from his hand, and make them bow to me and hug each other, and wipe their feet as men do on a door mat, made mirth for all of us, but also made us think how blessed we were in all that God has given.

A hideous bat my timid father tried to kill, he captured with a string and trained completely, so that now the "unattractive creature" seems full of wisdom, faithfulness and love. I'd trust it almost anywhere.

If I am wearisome, pray pass me by. I like to think of him.

Early one sultry morn, just as the dawn began to wave the night away, and lingering stars betrayed their sad captivity, we went upon the mountain to talk of reasons why there should be valleys, hills, and plains, with frequent changes, and there we stayed, like truant sparrows, until the breakfast hour was almost past, when, hastening home, a treacherous piece of earth gave way beneath our footing, and promised me a fatal fall, at least a dozen feet, to where a barren rock spoke naught but cruelty.

But scarcely had the unstable mass begun to move ere he had leaped beyond the danger, and turning swiftly, caught me safely in his arms as I descended, almost headlong, like a foolish waif.

While there he stood unshaken and unruffled, as though a wayward drop of rain and nothing more had found its way to his caress, the mountain changed into a tiny hill, and every object but himself grew dim and faded from my sight.

"Oh! pardon me," he said, with slowly moistening eyes. "I did not visit you for this. Such deeds belong to other ages and to distant climes. Your friendship and your life's esteem are well worth striving for, but I would win them by other means than threats of rude calamity or novel rescues. When fortune comes in such a guise, I fear my manhood suffers. Alas! the day! Let us not roam again."

No more was said, but soon I learned the need of valleys, hills and plains. And when we came to part, the pressure of his hand (so strangely like and yet unlike that of my nearest neighbors, the touch of whose broad palms betokened the same honesty, only less reverent and less concentrated) instilled another deep remembrance. And now he's gone, and I am left to ask am I too simple and is this called woe? E'en now my life is peaceful—the day is calm.

The neighbors still are kind and faithful—the neighborhood itself grows lovelier; my tasks are lighter even than before, and Parson B declares the world will envy one who calls me wife. My home is brightened by new company, and oft the choicest songsters make unequaled music.

I feel my mother's kind endearments, my father's wholesome words.

No sense of wrong from any one does ever encompass any thought of mine, nor does a wild emotion sway my breast. And yet I am not satisfied.

The hours go slowly by, and from the sky there comes a sort of greeting which I know is sympathy. Would he were here again.

Would he were here again.

HOW TO COMPOSE AN OVERTURE.—M. de Mirandol has just published an exceedingly curious letter, written by Rossini, in reply to a young artist who consulted him as to the best manner of composing an overture:—"1st recipe. Wait till the evening before the first performance. Nothing excites inspiration like necessity; the presence of a copyist waiting for your work, and the view of a manager in despair, tearing out his hair by handfuls. In Italy in my time all the managers were bald at thirty. 2d. I composed the overture to 'Othello' in a small room in the Barbaja Palace, where the baldest and most ferocious of managers had shut me up by force, with nothing but a dish of maccaroni, and the threat that I should not leave the place alive till I had written the last note. 3d. I wrote the overture to 'Gazza Ladra' on the day of the first performance in the upper loft of La Scala, where I had been confined by the manager under the guard of four scene-shifters, who had orders to throw my text out of the window, bit by bit, to copyists, who were waiting below to transcribe it. In default of music I was to be thrown out myself. 4th. For 'Barbiere' I did better. I composed no overture, but tacked on one intended for a very serious work called 'Ercabetta.' The public were deceived. 5th. I composed the overture to 'Count Ory' when angling with my feet in the water, and when in the company of M. Aguado, who was talking Spanish finance all the time. 6th. That of 'Guillaume Tell' was written under somewhat similar conditions. 7th. I did not compose any overture for 'Moïse,' &c."

PARISIAN CAFES 150 YEARS AGO.—A French paper contains an interesting sketch of Paris cafes, from which it appears that for 150 years these institutions have flourished very much in their present form. A German, M. Nemeitz, who visited Paris in 1720, gives some minute particulars about them. "The French," he says, "are great coffee drinkers. They say that this beverage is so cheering to them. There is a story afoot here how a certain lady, hearing that her husband had fallen in battle, promptly responded:—'Ah, unhappy wretch that I am. My coffee! My coffee! bring me my coffee.' " La Neuve Laurent then kept the establishment particularly frequented by wits, and here Gramaret, "the famous master of language who wrote the Campaigns of Le Roi of Sweden"—alas! the evanescence of fame! who to day has heard of Gramaret—was to be found as leader, just as Dryden was at Wills'. No cards were played in the cafes then, only chess and sometimes billiards, but the latter seems to have been very little in fashion then. He mentions one very great difference between now and then. None smoked, "as they do in England and Holland." Incidentally he alludes to the devotion for tennis at that time among the upper classes. A proficient at this pastime could, even if of comparatively humble degree, enter by its means the charmed circle of the then terrifically exclusive haut ton.

INDUSTRY.—Every industrious man by his labor, manual or mental, depends upon his personal exertions for fortune and fame. Every indolent man depends for subsistence upon the labor of others, upon patrimonial resources or upon luck and fraud. One adds to the common stock of wealth and human enjoyment, the other adds nothing. The last are like the grain-worms, which consume our crops, without rendering any equivalent to society.

SOLITUDE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY O. J. LAWRENCE.

Dedicated to Miss S. L.

In woods and glens I love to rove,
When the tired lumberer seeks his home;
Or by the woodman's pool to rest,
When pale the star looks on its breast.

Yet, when the silent evening sighs
With hallowed airs and symphonies,
My spirit takes another tone,
And sighs that it is all alone.

The autumn leaf is sear and dead,
It floats upon the water's bed;
I would not be a leaf, to die
Without recording sorrow's sigh!

The woods and winds with sullen wail
Tell all the same unvaried tale;
I've come to smile when I am free,
And when I sigh to sigh with me.

Yet in my dreams a form I view,
That thinks on me, and loves me too;
I start, and when the vision's flown
I weep that I am all alone.

Philadelphia, Nov., 1872.

AT THE DRAMATIC AGENCY.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY CHARLES H. DAY.

The technical terms of the profession are quite incomprehensible to the outsider who may by chance listen to the talk of the shop. We have but to climb a single flight of stairs to find ourselves in the presence of the dramatic agent who "arranges dates," "settles terms," and "fills time." The proprietor of the roof is industriously driving a quill replying to the numerous inquiries of manager, star and stock scattered all over the land. The walls are decorated with photographs and lithographs of leading professionals and others whose aspiration exceed their capabilities, but not their ambitions. Some of the portraits of antique stars are youthfulised and idealised, causing many a smart remark and sly laugh from the loungers and goers.

Files of programmes extend about the wall, announcing the appearance of Booth, Barrett and Cushman, Higgins, Frank and Pritchard, and the traveling knights of Thespis, Harry Clark, Forrester and Lannier. The Howard Athenæum and the variety theatres of Saginaw and Bay City are represented side by side with a bill of the play all the way from London or Liverpool, and even from the Antipodes.

During the summer season these rooms are crowded with "leading men" and "leading ladies," comedians and comediennes, and an occasional dashing young Miss of piquant pertness and beauty will there be found daily, until the contract is "closed" as "chambermaid" of some theatre, which is destined to profit by her talents, grace and good looks.

Albert W. Aiken drops in with his fingers ink-stained from the writing of a chapter of a new Indian story, the hero of which he saw keeping watch and wait over a cigar store as he came up town studying a new sensational advertisement for the "Witches of New York." "Across the Continent," with enthusiastic about "Ben McCullough," his new play; and Ben McCullough, the new son of Oliver Doud, reminds John P. Smith of how he mis it by "drawing out" just before he made the "hit" in drama of the savages of New York and the plains.

Lemingwell, the burlesquer, quizes Smith about "probabilities" the coming season, and tells the worn story in his repertoire to Dionisia Fisher, of the "Divorce Company," who is in none too good a humor because George Tyler is "going west," not with Horace Greeley, but with Geo. L. Fox and his "Humpty Dumpty," piloted by Ned Kendall, the man who knows all about bell ringing, and has the honor of gay-ding and directing that [illegible] of man and [illegible] which [illegible] and [illegible] just walked in from Binghamton or Matteawan, and is prepared to fill an "opening" for Hempstead, if any be offered. A shining light of the drama steps aside at the entrance door for Kimball, the "man monkey," who knows that he has it in him if he can only get the chance.

Here and there a diamond glitters on the spotless front of a juvenile man, while his neighbor looks wan and hungry and much in want of a fifteen cent plate.

The ballet girl, very much in need of a week's work, leans over the rail and converses with the ever-courteous agent, while the jeweled and gorgeously arrayed queen at her side awaits his leisure.

With a few turns of the wheel of fortune there will be many a change of station in life and in their professions. The gallant and handsome young "leading man" will totter up the stairs some day, and as meekly as he does now knowingly request that he be "booked," not for the young lovers and the heroes of the drama, but the sour uncles and the crabbed fathers of the play.

Your ballet girl of to-day, to-morrow stops before the door in her carriage, knowing full well her popularity and ability to "draw," and begs to decline the terms of Mr. So and So, and sweeps out of the room, not recognizing the obese old lady who was once the pride of the stage, but has long since ceased to be an attraction while reverses have sent diamonds and ornaments to Simpson's, where so many have gone before and so many are to go in the future.

The changes of time are kaleidoscopic and with as many transformations as the holiday pantomime. But why moralize and institute comparisons while Lemingwell and a few kindred spirits revive recollections of the past, of their earlier struggles for dramatic honors, and call to mind the ten thousand practical jokes and good things that have been told in the green-room, in the box-office, and have occurred upon the stage! The number of jokes, funny stories, and excruciatingly amusing scrapes recited of Charles Salisbury, a fat, jolly comedian and incorrigible wit, practical joker and happy scamp, would fill many a volume. His mad pranks caused him many a reprimand, and oft-times discharge; but oftener was he forgiven to immediately perpetrate some new and diabolical thing, which none but he could conceive or execute with the slightest chance of escaping scot free.

All the theatrical folk know the veteran manager, Tom Carr, who long directed the fortunes of the drama in Rochester. The story goes that in the time of the old Eagle Theatre, Buffalo, the waggish Salisbury aforesaid was a member of the corps dramatique, and Mr. Carr also carried on underneath the Thespian temple a restaurant, where patrons of the drama and disciples thereof were wont to refresh the inner man.

Carr had observed that Mr. Carr, desiring to take a bit of a lunch for himself in the way of a piece of pie, passed the tin over the counter to Salisbury, who happened to be opportunely present, with the request of:—

"Please to 'eat the pie, Mr. Salisbury."

The comedian, without hesitation, devoured the pie with a keen relish, without looking about him for the fi that the rightful owner had dropped.

"I'll take the pie now," said Carr, after waiting a sufficient time for it to be well warmed.

"I have eaten it," replied Salisbury, smacking his lips and looking very serene.

"You have beaten it?" exclaimed Carr, "I didn't tell you to 'beat' it."

"No," returned Salisbury, "you said nothing about heating it; if you had asked me to warm the pie at the stove, I would have made it as hot as toast for you, but as you asked me to eat it, down it went."

"What a cruel mistake," mumbled the restaurateur to himself. "When I say eat it, he heats it."

"A pound drowned!" is the startling caption of many a local item in the city press, and quite often the succeeding item reads, "Party Unknown." It was during the stay of Salisbury in Buffalo that the town was one morning startled by the intelligence that the body of a young man had been found floating in the river with every indication of having lain there some time.

Crowds of common on such occasions, quite a number gathered about the remains and commented upon the mystery of his taking off, prominent among whom was Salisbury and a spectacled, sharp-nosed, vinegar-visaged youth, who was extra officious and annoying by monopolizing the major portion of the conversation.

"My dear sir," exclaimed spectacles, button-holeing the comedian and dragging him toward the body:—"Who is here that can solve this mystery? Who can fathom it? Was it suicide or—worse? Is it not strange, sir, that in all this throng there is not one who knew him? Is there no sign of recognition?"

"It is somewhat remarkable," replied Salisbury, grimly, "that the corpse should not have been able to recognize at least one person in all this crowd."

Spectacles turned inquiringly and amazed upon the comedian, but his phiz wore a serious aspect, and the officious young gentleman withdrew, chagrined and rebuked.

Just here the relater was called aside and closeted in the manager's room with Mr. Jarrett, of the new Niblo's, "at the old stand." When the interview was ended, it was learned that "The Lemingwell" was engaged for the new Boucicaultian spectacle, and would appear therein, with these jolly heavy weights and rotund comedians, here that can solve this mystery? Who can fathom it? Mose Fiske and Ben Maginley. There are some things that make me tremble, and "these are them:"—Supposing that Lemingwell tells funny stories to the one hundred and twenty beauties of the ballet, and they forget their business, and then supposing again that Ben Maginley, in absence of mind, should imagine himself in the ring instead of upon the boards, and should throw a flip-flap over the curb—we mean over the footlights—what would Jarrett and Palmer do in the premises?

Why, of course, they would rush post-haste to the dramatic agency and engage Tom Donnelly, of the Brooklyn Olympic, and Owen Fawcett, of the Fifth Avenue Theatre, and there would be no weight lost.

It is not the forte of any one to act a part on the mimic boards, but every one is carrying on a little drama of his own, and, while we encourage and patronize the player, let us aim, if it may be, to play "leading business" on the world's stage or shine as stars in our proper constellation. But it it be destined that our walk shall be the more humble and none the less deserving, we will put our shoulder to the wheel in "general utility," and demonstrate that the constant toiler and the patient waiter is not found wanting in "responsible business," and will leave a good record "on the bills" when the "time is all filled" and "the season is over."

☞ CORRESPONDENTS, advertisers, and all others writing in relation to matters connected with this or any other department of the CLIPPER, are respectfully requested to address their favors to the editor and proprietor, and thereby avoid omissions, mistakes and confusion, which are likely to occur when such communications are addressed to our assistants.

NOTICE.

ADVERTISERS must hand in their favors before 6 o'clock on Monday evening, in order to have them appear in that week's issue.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ We never answer questions by mail. All addressed to us seeking information will be answered through this column only.

A SORROWING WIFE.—Your husband's case is very complicated, and it would be necessary for us to know all the details before giving a definite answer to your question. We are of opinion, however, that the alleged offense does not come within the provisions of the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the United States; but under certain circumstances he might be liable, under the provisions of our civil code, to be arrested and held to bail in this state at the instance of the other members of his firm. As the matter is evidently of great importance to you, we would advise you to consult a good lawyer. Mr. John G. Boyd, of the CLIPPER building, is qualified to give you the best counsel in such matters, as he is fully acquainted with the British and American laws and court practice, a great desideratum in your case.

A. F. L., Sacramento.—1. The person betting that Occident had never trotted better than 2:20¾ on record, than the 2:20¾ made by Goldsmith Maid in her race with Occident, loses, for that horse trotted in a public trial in 2:18¾; 2:18¾; 2:19, over the Sacramento track. He must, therefore, pay the bet. 2. If you bet that you mark within a second of the time made, and mark 2:19, and 2:18¾ is made, of course you win.

EUCHRE, Perth Amboy.—B had no right to play alone against A's lone hand, as only three aces were in play in lone hand, and that is the privilege he makes, takes up or orders up the trump card, thus assuming the responsibility of the trump. B is only entitled to two points if he euchres A, and the latter to two points if he makes a march.

E. H. J., Lakeville, Conn.—The two parties who tied on 41 are entitled to the first and second prizes (the watch and chain and the $5 bill), and they must throw off for choice, if they cannot mutually agree on a division. The party throwing 40 takes the box of cigars, and the thrower of 39 the $3 bill.

DOUBTFUL, Titusville.—The player had no right to take the card exposed, but as the dealer and the third player did not object at the time, and in the former suit sequently drew cards himself and bet were made, he could not object afterwards, and his doing so is not creditable to his sense of fair play.

RAZOR, Chicago.—1. Don't open up, whom you give your opponent one when he begs, he is compelled to take it. 2. You cannot give more than one when your opponent begs. 3. The Jack is scored the moment it is turned, no matter if it be set to the suit that is run. 4. In casino, cards count three, and the spades one. 5. Very fair.

J. B. B., Springfield, O.—The party that carries the state, is governed by the vote cast for the highest office; therefore, as the democrats elected the governor in their district, the state would be claimed as having gone democratic, and bets are subject to the ruling, consequently A won.

E. W. G., New Orleans, La.—1. There is no demand for one act comedies. 2. We have no correspondent in Salt Lake City. 3. Enquire at any place where they sell plays in your city for a copy, and you will find the manager's name thereon. We do not happen to have a copy by us.

E. E. R., Cincinnati, O.—B loses the bet, the true meaning of which was that Grant would have a majority of 3,000 or over in New Hampshire. B's claim that for A to win the majority should be exactly 3,000, is ridiculous.

OLD SUBSCRIBER, Unionville.—Had you been a subscriber, or even an occasional reader of the CLIPPER during the past two years, you would have seen numerous reports of the performances of Detaille, "The Man with the Iron Jaw."

C. E. P., Cambridgeport, Mass.—We have no record of the actual weight of Tom Thumb, Commodore Nutt or Minnie Warren. It is usually the policy of exhibitors of such curiosities to underrate their weights.

[illegible]chester.—In the legitimate game of euchre there [illegible]d, and you must make your own rules for the [illegible] of amusement you are playing, as there are none of [illegible]thority existing.

[illegible] Washing'on, D. C.—1. A wins; poker being a show [illegible]st hand wins, whatever the holder may call it. 2. [illegible]ot entitled to vote by the cards he helped himself to; [illegible]t stand his original hand.

[illegible]LAND, O.—1. He can make a sweep with his ten spot. 2. [illegible] it was a fair, square deal, he could call it such. 3. A shuffle [illegible]s a deal. 4. You can claim two points, and if he has not [illegible]en a trick, he can claim three points.

A. F. K., Suffield, Conn.—A loses; draughts is a more scientific [illegible] than backgammon, hence the one struck entirely into the latter, and is entirely absent in the former, consequently the [illegible] are a very much greater number in the former. [illegible]w Jersey, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Pennsylvania.

E. U. G., New Orleans.—1. Accepted for early presentation. 2. Negotiate through one of our dramatic agents, who will give you a letter or idea of the terms, etc., than we are able to. 3. Will bear it in mind.

O. F. H., Baltimore.—You are wrong. B wins the money. Poker is a show game, and the hand must speak for itself. It being quite immaterial what the holder calls it. Consequently as B's full hand beats A's pair of kings, the former wins the pot.

W. K., Baltimore, Md.—1. The Hanlons are in Paris, France, and little Bob is with them. 2. You can order Leslie's Illustrated through Wilmer and Rogers, No. 47 Nassau street. Single copies cannot be purchased here.

S. E., Providence, R. I.—Full evening dress is the most appropriate for dramatic readings. A black suit with white necktie, and white or light colored kid gloves. Some selections might be read while sitting.

H. D.—A and B are playing six card cribbage. A plays a deuce, B plays a tray, A then plays an ace and takes three, after which B plays a four spot and claims four. Is B right or not?" He is.

STAR, Selma, Ala.—The fault must be with your post office. The CLIPPER has been mailed regularly to you every Tuesday morning.

FRISCO, San Francisco, Cal.—There are no schools in this country for fitting persons for the stage, although there are some few actors who at times receive pupils.

J. H. F., Red Bank.—We find it utterly impossible to get at the merits of your disputed bets, and you must settle it amongst yourselves, unless you both agree upon a statement of the facts.

R. W. S., Memphis.—P. T. Barnum is interested in the circus you refer to, as well as the museum. He has not as yet shown which opens this evening, Nov. 18th, at the Hippotheatron.

VIEUX TEMPS.—B loses both bets and must pay. A bet cannot be drawn except by mutual consent, and it is dishonorable on B's part to refuse payment of the two wagers.

A CONSTANT READER, Chicago.—Tom Sayers did pay forfeit of either £5 or £10, we don't know which, staked for a match with Jim Mace, which his backer would not allow him to go on with.

BARTON AND MIKES, Williamsport, Pa.—A bet made on a sure thing is pronounced [illegible] fair, provided no fraud or misrepresentation is used in order to have [illegible]ssatic or blue stone.

C. M. C., Glenham.—Take 8 grains iron [illegible]ssalts, spring water, 1 oz., wash the eyes with it, letting a drop [illegible] Repeat this daily and you will soon cure it.

J. H. F., Philadelphia, Pa.—1. It will date this season, but we may next. 2. The subscription expires with No. 37 of this volume.

COL. LEW SMITH.—Permit us to renew our thanks; the bill is of after the war, as one of the ads. mentions "price bread of 18.9," showing it to be of recent date.

A. L. F.—The same channel was open to you to refute the charge, the confidential character of your note prevents us from making any rejoinder.

SIG. A. B.—We are not aware of the song you have having been set to music. They were written for our "Variety" department, and appeared originally in the CLIPPER.

A AND B, Worcester, Mass.—The Jack is scored the moment it is turned, provided there is no misdeal in that hand. In case of a subsequent misdeal, the Jack is still scored.

J. L. C., Wilkesbarre.—1. He did not challenge O'Baldwin, but he did the other party. 2. John McDevitt's run of 1,483, in his match against Goldthwaite, is the best.

OLD MAN, Bellaire, O.—1. Aaron Jones was born on March 1st, 1833; Mike McCool, March 12th, 1837. Tom Hyer died in this city, June 26th, 1864.

G. E. A., Ottaway.—Your question is unanswerable, as the amount it cost the allied powers for the peninsular war cannot be ascertained.

UNCLE ABE, Trenton.—A is stuck for the whole amount to be paid for the oysters. Both B and C having beaten A on the second throw, it is not necessary for them to throw off their tie.

J. C. L.—We prefer the following of the two:—Hicks, Spaulding, Start, Barnes, Sutton, George Wright, Cuthbert, Eggler and York.

H. M., Vicksburg, Miss.—The returns, as they stand at present, although not yet corrected, summed up, give Grant a majority over Greeley of about 55,000 in New York State.

H. H. J., Chittenango, N. Y.—D, H and C are the losers, and must between them pay $5 each to A, B, E, F, G and I, the winners. It will therefore cost D, H and C $10 each.

PHILADELPHIA.—C. J. A. loses. Blackwood, when he made his fast record of 2:31¾ at three years old, carried the regulation weight.

MUSICAL FRIEND.—Billy Edwards and Arthur Chambers are matched to fight on the first Wednesday in April, 1873, and $100 from each are now on deposit.

READER, Niagara Falls.—In poker, a winning hand does not lose in consequence of its holder calling it wrong. Poker is a show game, and the hands speak for themselves.

W. R.—To answer your question will require a laborious search of our files, and we have not been too busy this week. Will answer at our earliest opportunity.

Y. G. C., Waterbury, Conn.—In cutting for deal at euchre, the Jack, of course, is the lowest card, and beats the ace.

S. W., Philadelphia.—Sixty cents for each insertion, or $6.24 for thirteen insertions, cash in advance.

CONSTANT READER, Westfield.—Philadelphia, Pa., probably covers more ground than any other city in the United States.

QUORN, Cincinnati, O.—We are not aware that such a game was played.

A AND B, New Orleans.—The bet must be drawn, as both parties were right in their respective positions.

J. B., Titusville.—There are no data upon which the bet can be decided.

J. W. M., Pittsburgh.—Both terms can be properly applied, for "a mare is a horse, but a horse is not a mare."

CHARLES R., Kansas City.—At cribbage, four fours and a seven count 15.

J. M. H., Paris, Ky.—A player assisting, prevents his partner going alone at euchre.

F. M. REESE, Baltimore, Md.—You can purchase "Pocahontas" of any dealer in plays.

OLD SUBSCRIBER, Ansonia, Ct.—No; women in England are not allowed to vote for members of parliament.

C. W. B., Alton, Ill.—1. The backer of Greeley is entitled to the $3 forfeit only. 2. There must be a fresh deal.

STAR UNION.—Bill Poole was shot between 12 o'clock, midnight, and 1 o'clock, A. M., on Feb. 25th, 1855.

PAT R., New London, Ct.—Mace defeated the party mentioned near New Orleans, La., May 10, 1850.

JOHNNY AND HARRY, Milwaukee, Wis.—1. Bill Poole received his death wound during an affray at Stanwix Hall, this city. 2. Mace.

F. E., Lykens, Pa.—We cannot say exactly how much the gentleman is worth, but rumor estimates it at about twenty millions.

J. C. AND D. S.—Helmbold ran against and beat Longfellow in the four mile race at the Saratoga August meeting in 1871.

B. B., Cincinnati.—November is considered the best month for squirrel hunting.

DUFF, Jack on.—"At cribbage, how many do four fives and one ten count?" Twenty-eight.

W. R. S., Philadelphia.—Accept renewed assurances of our consideration for fresh favors duly received.

MAD. A. LAKE.—An interesting memento of the arena in the oldest house in which to accept our thanks.

"S. A. M."—Rather out of date for this section, the episcopy having "run" its course hereaway.

M. M. H., Marshall, Mo.—Respectfully declined. We never have traveling correspondents.

A. S. L.—Miss Jenny Engel has sung at the Theatre Comique in this city.

KERO.—The residents or citizens of the District of Columbia have no vote for president.

J. E. M., Trumansburg.—The man who bets upon Grant wins, of course.

ALFRED OLIVER, Savannah, Ga.—The fastest time on record for 100 yards, by a pedestrian, is 9½ sec., by George Seward.

T. M. W., Phila.—A straight beats three of a kind, unless differently and mutually agreed upon before commencing play.

DAMIAN, Worcester.—The game of four handed cribbage is either 61, or twice round the board as may be agreed upon.

ERIE U. S. CAVALRY.—As neither O'Brien nor Lawrence was elected mayor, the bet is drawn.

W. H. F., Baltimore, Md.—An euchre only counts two under any circumstances.

W. W. F., Manitoba.—S must wait until the others have played, before he can turn his pile.

JOE ELLIOT.—No. Address H. Wright, 13 Boylston street, Boston.

ADMIRER, Warren.—Cannot say. They propose giving up professional ball play.

C. SUBSCR.—Cannot say until the averages are sent in, which will not be for some weeks yet.

J. L., Memphis, Tenn.—London, Eng., has a population of 3,251,804, and Paris, France, the next largest city, 1,899,462.

MOSS, Troy, N. Y.—Write on one side of paper only; you compel us to copy your items.

G. S., Philadelphia, Pa.—The character of Tiny Tim is in the late Charles Dickens' "Christmas Carol."

C. MCN., Baltimore, Md.—The business is fraudulent, but there is no law under which the man can be prosecuted.

QUERIE.—1. B wins, as Heenan fought Sayers once only. 2. We never answer such questions. 3. It would.

S. P. STEPHENS, Harrisburg, Pa.—The letter you refer to has been sent for.

C. A. M., Philadelphia.—1. Will probably use it. 2. Where the author omits punctuation the editor or compositor attends to it.

F. W., Jersey City.—Thank you; will use one, if not both, and return them when done with.

J. MORRIS, Galveston, Texas.—Please read and implicitly follow instructions.

SILK HAT, Navy Yard, Brooklyn, L. I.—Mrs. F. B. Conway performed at the New York Theatre in "Under the Gaslight."

R. C., New Orleans, La.—Send to White and Goulland, music publishers, Boston, Mass.

J. S. N., Chicago.—James Gordon Bennett died June 1st, 1872.

DUKE, Albany.—The party who bet that 45 would be beat loses.

R. H., Gymnast.—For three months, cash in advance, $15.60.

C. E. C., Cincinnati.—Thank you; will return the old timer.

S. C., Phila.—Four trays and a nine, at cribbage, count 24.

J. SWEENEY.—It is not up to the mark for publication.

READER.—Inquire at the district attorney's office.

FARO.—Spaulding's record is the best, we believe.

T. M., Patterson, N. J.—"A ham" is proper.

CONCIA.—We cannot decide the point.

PORT CHESTER, N. Y.—A loses the bet.

CHEBOOT AND CIGARETTE.—Declined.

DOCTOR.—We do not know.

J. AND M.—B loses.

NEW YORK AS A THIRD FIDDLER.

A feeling of dissatisfaction and uneasiness is beginning to manifest itself in this city, consequent upon the recurrence of destructive fires in large cities; and we find that this sadness, first evidenced by the discerning few, is now asserting itself among the masses. But we are not surprised at this; the wonder with us has been how long New York intended to calmly submit to the contumely and insult sought to be heaped upon her by other cities. Heretofore the great metropolis has taken the lead in all extraordinary movements, gigantic schemes and destructive calamities on the American continent. She showed the world what she was capable of doing in the way of conflagrations by the great fire in December, 1835, when she permitted the devouring element to swallow up Wall street and whole blocks of banks, store houses, newspaper offices, insurance agencies, and millions upon millions of perishable properties. This she only did after several cities, envious of her greatness, got up miserable thousand dollar fires, and claimed supremacy in that line. These jealous one-horse towns were forced to subside when New York, quietly and without ostentation, consumed the then most valuable business section of the city; and they were scarcely heard of again until October, 1871, when Chicago, which had long been chafing under her humiliation, suddenly emerged from her obscurity, and with the mock bravado of a subjugated criminal, made one desperate effort to restore the prestige of her name for deeds of great renown, and the lake city lay buried in her ashes as the sinful result. But the metropolis permitted this to pass unnoticed, content to let her past record attest the ne plus ultra of her undying fame; and for a time Chicago, like a giant refreshed with new wine, presumed upon her incendiary greatness, and kicked at New York like the ass in the fable. Witnessing our supineness over Chicago's fiery achievement, and attributing it to a depressed and humiliated condition, Boston—which had previously made a most lamentable and degraded failure over her so-called musical jubilee—resolved to outdo herself, and consequently the rest of the country, by one grand, sweeping sea of flame that should burn up every living thing and leave but a desert waste of her former vastness; and on the 9th of November, Anno Domini, 1872, she calmly set the fiery sphere in motion, and though only partially successful in the object of her destructive mission, Boston to-day exultingly rejoices over her burning shame, claims pre-eminence as a shining example in the world's record of remarkable places, and points derisively to New York as playing third fiddle to this grand aggregation of pyrotechnic talent. For thirty-seven years this city has rested on her well-earned laurels won in the flaming scenes of carnage and destruction that witnessed the old year out in the olden time, and made her name high over all on history's undying scroll. But, as we before remarked, the attempts of Chicago and Boston to belittle her in the eyes of the world, through their insane attempts to wipe out her record as a fire-stricken city, are beginning to bear their fruits; a restless, saddened feeling is spreading through out all classes of her people, increasing from day to day as Boston's malicious boasts are borne hither upon the [illegible] and [illegible] how puny are the efforts of such sickly provincial towns as those scorched by a touch of fire in Illinois and Massachusetts. New York must and shall be first in calamity as well as in "greatness;" in fiery ordeals as well as in political chicanery; and it will not do to arouse the recumbent lion, for revenge is sweet, and broad the path that leads to destruction. We have said.

BOSTON is a wicked city, and though, during her recent conflagration, her newspapers asserted that New York and Philadelphia thieves were ravaging the place, and committing all sorts of depredations, yet the robberies were, in reality, perpetrated by her own criminals, who knew every nook and corner of the burnt district, and could tell precisely where the valuables were located. The outcry of Boston's press against New York and Philadelphia was like that of the guilty wretch crying stop thief while he was fleeing from the wrath to come. When the wreck has been cleared away, the losses calculated, and the destroyed portions of the city rebuilt, how very small will be the costs of the great change if it shall be found that Boston has been "purified by fire."

A VOICE FROM AFAR.—This is what a late number of the London Standard says:—"The Boston fire is a scandalous outrage on civilization, and an evidence of a most inefficient city government." If this Standard sheet were disinterested and standard authority, we should cry amen, and plead; but here is where the nigger in the fence crops out:—English insurance companies have to bear a portion of the loss; so long as the profits came in, Boston was a well-governed city; when losses loomed up, vice versa. 'Twas ever thus.

A PUZZLE.—What bothers us is this:—Whenever a safe is dug out of the ruins of the Boston fire, and its contents are found uninjured, nearly every paper in the land publishes the name of the maker of that safe; but when a safe turns up damaged, and all the things destroyed, the maker's name is no more mentioned than if it had never been made. Why show such partiality?

PROF. PEPPER has been telling the people of Boston about some of the properties of light and fire. Just as if they didn't know something about it already.

WOULD IT be according to law to designate the habitues of a drinking saloon as "the bar association?"

SINCE THE CONFLAGRATION in Boston there is "a great cry, but little wool."

NEWS OF THE WEEK BOILED DOWN.

☞ Rapid progress is being made in clearing away the debris of the burnt district at Boston, Mass. And has poured in, both from home and abroad, for the sufferers, thousands upon thousands of joy and sorrow, and pine lumber and emigrants, and hopes and salt fish.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

Dramatic.

OUR FOREIGN FILES BEAR DATE OF NOV. 2D.—At the London, Eng. Theatres, but few changes had occurred. An account of Oxenford's adaptation of Dryden's "Amphitryon," produced at the Court Theatre on Oct. 26th, and Henry J. Byron's burlesque entitled "The Lady of the Lane," produced at the Strand on Oct. 31st, may be found in another part of this issue.....During the recess the Haymarket Theatre has undergone considerable alteration; the pit has been entirely re-constructed, the floor raised and the seats placed wider apart. The proscenium is completely new, the old ugly curve which surmounted the stage is removed, and a series of pendentives substituted, which are painted in imitation of gold mosaic, and supported upon short bracketed columns of gold, and the upper cove, which before contained a large picture, occupying the whole space, is now filled with an architectural arrangement containing a painting of the recital of a Roman comedy. The decorations generally of the house are in pure Pompeiian style, and consist of a velarium stretched upon the ceiling, which arrangement is also carried out upon that of the gallery, and a profuse employment of all the rich and bold coloring upon the other parts and the box fronts (from which latter all the projecting ornaments have been removed) made use of at the period of art. The saloons, box lobbies and general approaches, are treated in the same spirit, but in a simple manner, so as not to detract from the effect of the auditorium. The theatre re-opened on Nov. 2d with "Pygmalion and Galatea" as the chief attraction.....At Drury Lane a morning performance of "The Lady of the Lake" was announced for Nov. 9th, when children and schools would be admitted at reduced prices.....At the Princess, on Nov. 4th, "Hamlet" was announced for one week with Mr. Phelps and Mr. Creswick as Hamlet, respectively, on specified evenings.....At the Gaiety, at the morning performance on Nov. 9th, a new and original domestic drama in four acts by T. W. Speight, entitled "The Bicon Casket; or, Mabel's Two Birthdays," and on Nov. 16th, a new farcical comedy in two acts by E. A. de Pass, entitled "Debt," and a new and original opera bouffe composed by J. A. Kappey, entitled "The Wager," were announced for production.....At the Globe, on Nov. 4th, a new and original play in three acts by Frank Marshall, entitled "The White Feather," was to have been produced.....At the Opera Comique H. T. Craven was closing the "Chimney Corner."

.....At the Surrey, on Nov. 9th, Mr. Murray Wood was announced to make his first appearance in London, Eng., acting in "The Serf."..... At Sadler's Wells J. H. Allen commenced an engagement of twenty-four nights on Nov. 2d, acting Lagardere in "The Duke's Daughter."..... At the Standard Mr. and Mrs. Bandmann closed a successful engagement on Nov. 2d.....The Olympic is in the management of Miss Fanny Josephine Carlotta Cavendish.....No changes had occurred at any of the other theatres.

DEATH OF MISS O'NEILL.—Miss O'Neill, the bewitching Juliet, the incomparable Belvidera and Monimia of our fathers, is dead. In other words, Lady Beecher, widow of the late Sir William Wrixon Beecher, died at her residence, Ballygriffin, near Mallow, on Oct. 26th, in her 81st year. The great dramatic genius and brilliant triumphs of Miss O'Neill are matters of history. On the stage she had no rival—in fact she elevated the profession, and gave to it dignity and respectability. In her famous characters of Mrs. Haller, Mrs. Beverley and Belvidera, contemporary critics represent her as having been unapproachable in her realization of those impersonations. Miss Eliza O'Neill was the eldest daughter of Mr. John O'Neill, the manager of a strolling company of comedians who visited the small towns of Ireland. Her mother's maiden name was Featherstone. As a child her services were called into early requisition, and her powers were first tried as Desdemona, playing the Duke of York to her father's Richard the Third. Engaged by Mr. Talbot, the lessee of the Irish northern circuit consisting of Belfast, Newry and Londonderry, her fame rapidly extended. An engagement followed for Dublin, where her Portia delighted the critics, and her ability in the romantic, melodramatic, and musical branches of her profession was shown by her effective rendering of Blanche of Devan in "The Lady of the Lake" and other characters. The next season Richard Lalor Shiel wrote expressly for her his domestic tragedy of "Adelaide; or, The Emigrants," and invitations from metropolitan managers speedily followed the widening reputation of her beauty and talents. Eventually Mr. John Kemble's offer of an engagement for three years, at a salary of fifteen, sixteen, and seventeen pounds a week, was accepted, and Miss O'Neill came to Covent Garden Theatre, where she made a brilliant début as Juliet on the 6th of October, 1814. When the curtain fell and the comedy of "The Merry Wives of Windsor" was announced for the next evening's performance, the crowded and delighted audience demanded a repetition of "Romeo and Juliet," which was accordingly complied with. Of a medium height, fair complexion, with features of Grecian mould, Miss O'Neill possessed every personal charm, and her voice was exquisitely soft, flexible and melodious. Conway was the Romeo of the night; Jones, Mercutio, and Mrs. Davenport, the Nurse. On the 14th of October she established her Belvidera further established her position in public favor, and the house was crammed every night she appeared. Byron offered a higher tribute than any mere praise could give when he positively declined to go to see Miss O'Neill lest he should be induced to think her a rival of Mrs. Siddons. An authority on acting, Mrs. Fanny Kemble, classed Miss O'Neill among the artists whose success was greatly due to their intense character and ranked her in this respect above Kean. "John Kemble and Mrs. Siddons," she says, "were always in earnest in what they were about, and Miss O'Neill used to cry bitterly in all her tragic parts." One of the most pathetic and, indeed, painful passages in the career of Mrs. Siddons is the time when she used to complain of being forgotten because of Miss O'Neill; and when reading the praises of the younger woman's exquisite pathos she would ask, querulously, "Do people think I never drew a tear?" Mrs. Siddons was tempted to re-appear on the stage for the purpose of eclipsing Miss O'Neill, and was bitterly aggrieved when some ill-natured caricatures appeared, contrasting the youth and symmetry of the younger artist with the overgrown and ponderous form, wherein years had smothered the once incomparable Lady Macbeth. Her last performance in London was as Mrs. Haller, in "The Stranger," on the 15th of July, 1816. She shortly afterwards fulfilled a few provincial engagements, and then retired from the stage, immediately on her marriage with Mr. William Wrixon Beecher, then M. P. for Mallow, December 18th, 1819. The ceremony was performed at Kilfane Church, by the Dean of Ossory. On the death of his uncle, in 1833, Mr. Beecher succeeded to a very ancient baronetcy, and his wife became Lady Wrixon Beecher. Lady Beecher, who has been some years a widow, is the mother of the present baronet and a numerous family.

MISS ROSE COLLEN, of the Strand Theatre, London, Eng., is seriously ill with rheumatic fever.

MLLE. CORNELIE D'ARKA, who was engaged by Jarrett & Palmer for the coming season at Niblo's Garden, N. Y., but was prevented from making the journey to America on account of indisposition, has signed a contract for an engagement, with a forfeiture of £3,000 in case of the non-fulfilment thereof, to commence in October, 1873.

THE KING OF DENMARK has laid the foundation stone of a new National Theatre, at Copenhagen.

MISS JENNIE WILMORE was announced to commence a week's engagement at the Theatre Royal, Cardiff, Wales, on Nov. 4th.

Musical.

THE ENGLISH OPERA COMPANY, under the direction of Mr. Aynsley Cooke, was announced to commence a season at the National Standard Theatre, London, Eng., on Nov. 4th. The company and announcements are as follows:—Artistes, Mr. George Perren and Mr. Nordblom, Mr. Cotte, Mr. Farquharson, Mr. Aynsley Cooke, and Mr. Bentley; Mesdames Blanche Cole, Emma Hayward, Madame Haigh-Dyer, Miss Goodhall, &c. Full band and chorus. Conductor, Mr. Sydney Naylor. On Monday, Wednesday and Thursday, Nov. 4th, 6th and 7th, "The Bohemian Girl." Thaddeus, Mr. George Perren; Arline, Miss Blanche Cole; Count, Mr. Aynsley Cooke; Devilshoof, Mr. Farquharson. On Tuesday and Friday, "Rowanton." Rowanton, Madame Haigh-Dyer; Manrico, Mr. Nordblom; Azucena, Miss Goodhall. On Saturday, "La Sonnambula." Elvino, Mr. George Perren; Amina, Miss Blanche Cole. Monday, Nov. 11th, "The Lily of Killarney." .....The Royal Philharmonic Miss Emily Soldene was singing in "Genevieve de Brabant."..... At the Opera Comique "L'Oeil Creve" was the chief attraction.

IT IS EXPECTED that Gounod will himself direct, his new opera, "Polinto," at La Scala, Milan.

THE "CENT VIERGES," ("The Hundred Virgins"), with the sparkling music by M. Charles Lecocq, having gone the round of Belgium, Holland, Russia, France and Germany, is to be introduced in London, Eng.; and Mr. R. Reece has undertaken the task of preparing a purified adaptation, so necessary as regards all French comic operas, to be produced at the Vaudeville Theatre.

SIGNOR ARDITI has, it is stated, been engaged to accompany Madame Adelina Patti, as conductor, during that lady's forthcoming tour in the United States.

MR. JAMES REED, the author of "The Good Rhine Wine," and other well known songs, died on Oct. 27th, in greatly reduced circumstances, at the age of seventy-three.

MLLE. ALBANI'S Amina, in the "Somnambula," at the Paris, France, Italian Opera House, has met with much the same reception from critics and connoisseurs as it did in London. The fair Canadian is regarded as being to her noviciate, with good upper notes, but possessing little quality in the medium range, and none at all in the lower ones. As an actress she made no impression. M. Capoul was very successful as Elvino.

MADAME ARABELLA GODDARD has been engaged for a prolonged tour in Australia, wherein she plans to visit, it is said, the principal towns during the next three months and then proceed to California, terminating her tour in America.

MR. SIDE KEENE is at present at the saline bath establishment at Droitwich, undergoing treatment for his malady, rheumatic gout.

THE ALLEGHANIANS, Swiss Bell Ringers and vocalists performed at Rochester, Eng., Oct. 26th, 29th and 30th.

MLLE. VIOLETTA CELVILLE.—This accomplished prima donna has been meeting with extraordinary success in Milan. On the occasion of her benefit, which recently took place, the Opera House was filled to repletion, a storm of applause and a shower of bouquets greeting her as she made her appearance.

FROM MELBOURNE, Australia, we have a report of the death of John Russell, well and favorably known in England, America and Australia for his many attainments. Mr. Russell was born in Liverpool, Eng., and was one of the founders of the Philharmonic Society in that town. He was also the founder of the Harmonic Society of Brooklyn, in 1848. In 1853 he went to Melbourne, and was the pioneer of music in that city, having been the founder of the present Philharmonic Society of Melbourne. From that time until 1867 he was a leading spirit in the society, and continued so less than a month ago, when he was seized with a slight paralytic stroke, which gradually developed into the malady which eventually caused his death. He went to Ballarat in 1858 in search of renewed health, but the change had not the desired effect, and he returned to Melbourne in March last, only to end his days in the land of his adoption, at the age of sixty-seven years.

Variety Halls.

DESTRUCTION BY FIRE OF THE OXFORD MUSIC HALL, LONDON, ENG.—The Oxford—certainly the most magnificent music hall in London—was, on the morning of Nov. 1st, almost totally destroyed by fire. On the preceding evening the performances by the company engaged took place as usual, but by six o'clock on the following morning nothing remained but the handsome vestibule, the two saloons which flank the hall, and a mass of charred and blackened ruins. The fire, we understand, was first discovered at 3.55 A. M. by a constable, who was passing through Hanway street, and who at once gave the alarm. The situation of the hall, hidden as it is from the street, favors the probability that some time must have elapsed between the first outbreak and the discovery, so that when the engines arrived the flames had secured a hold which it seemed almost impossible to overcome. Captain Shaw, Superintendents Bridges, Palmer and others, were among the first on the spot, and as happily plenty of water was forthcoming, the firemen and the salvage corps went to work with a will, and in about a couple of hours succeeded in arresting the progress of the flames. The ruins on the following afternoon presented the following appearance:—The floor of the noble hall was one confused heap of charred timber, broken glass, iron rods, twisted gaspipes, battered sun burners, fractured slabs of marble, shattered musical instruments, half-burnt chairs, fallen plaster, disfigured ornaments and debris which it is impossible to describe. The stage, the balcony, the private boxes, the massive pillars which formed such prominent features in the architectural beauties of the Oxford, all presented a scene of desolation and disfigurement. Above, nothing stood between us and the sky but the blackened rafters, from which dangled the iron rods and supports for the lumen apparatus, generally brought into use in the course of an Oxford entertainment. In the saloons, which, as we have stated, have suffered but little, the stalls and a valuable picture are uninjured, entirely uninjured. Some valuable music scores, kept underneath the stage, have also been preserved, and although several instruments (including the Metallical frames of the drums which suffered by the fire which took place here during Mr. Morton's management, about four years ago) have been totally destroyed, the majority have happily been secured. Two servants, who slept in close proximity to the stage, and a second time were fired from the considerable progress ere they became alarmed, as they attributed the noise of falling rafters to the bustle usually going on in an adjacent brewery. They made their escape eventually by climbing through a window, and by creeping over the tiles of a neighboring house into the brewery yard, where they alighted, suffering only from the fright they had experienced. During the day the ruins were visited by the surveyors and assessors of the different insurance offices, but no satisfactory conclusion was arrived at as to the cause of the fire. Mr. Byers, in order to prevent loss to his large and efficient staff, has made arrangements to transfer them to the Canterbury Hall, which he will open on Nov. 4th.

HARRY RICHARDS, a comic singer of repute in London and the provinces, has made quite a success in Australia. The following ladies and gentlemen compose his company:—Miss Carrie Rickards, burlesque actress and vocalist; Harry Hallam, Australian tenor, and Wm. Sanderson, dialect and operatic vocalist. J. Allison is the agent.

Negro Minstrelsy.

SAM HAGUE'S SLAVE TROUPE commenced the second year of their stay at Liverpool, Eng., on Oct. 31st, when the entire receipts were devoted to local charities. E. R. Leavitt commenced a re-engagement on Oct. 28th. Robin Howard had achieved success, and the latest novelty on the bills was a burlesque, written by T. D. Fenner, entitled "Dr. Mary W. Orker; or, The Female Physician." During the month of December the company will perform at Belfast, Ireland, for three weeks, and during that time St. James Hall will be altered at a cost of some £3,000, and will be re-opened on Dec. 23d.

Circuses.

THE SEASON OF TAYLEURS AND HUTCHINSON'S CIRCUS, at Bath, Eng., was rapidly drawing to a close.....Ginnett's Circus had located for a short season at Coventry, Eng.....Mr. Batty's new circus building at Dublin, Ireland, is completed and was announced to be opened on Nov. 4th.....Powell's Circus is reported as doing a good business at Leek, Eng.....Sanger's Circus exhibited at Norwich, Eng., Oct. 28th and 29th.....The last nights of Allen's Circus, at Scarborough, Eng., were announced, and Mander's Menagerie commenced a series of exhibitions there on Oct. 28th.....Hengler's Circus is well patronized at Sheffield, Eng., and it was announced that the late accident had been unattended by any fatal results..... At Adams' Royal Circus, Southport, Eng., the proprietor took a benefit on Nov. 1st..... Powell and Clarke's Paragon Circus commenced a season at Stockton-on-Tees, Eng., on Nov. 2d.....Tom Fillis was presented on Oct. 26th with a handsome silver lever watch and massive gold chain, by the members of Cooke and Weldon's Royal Circus and several friends and admirers.

TO THE MINSTREL
PROFESSION OF AMERICA.
SAM. HAGUE'S MINSTRELS,
(THE ORIGINAL GEORGIA MINSTRELS),
AT THE
ST. JAMES' HALL,
LIVERPOOL, ENGLAND.
EXTRACT FROM LIVERPOOL DAILY POST, NOV. 1ST, 1872.
Although not pretending to the highest rank amongst entertainments, negro minstrelsy has secured and retains a hold upon the British public, which is one of the most striking phenomena in the history of modern amusements, and of all enterprises of this sort the most successful is that which, under the direction of Messrs. Hague and Lee, has had so long and brilliant a run of success at the St. James' Hall.....The management celebrated the second anniversary of its tenure of that establishment, and they might well be disposed to take special note of the fact that for two years the hall has been open on every night except those when performances have been prohibited by law. Originally the company was known as the Slave Troupe, the performers having been actually slaves one and all, collected and incorporated as long ago as 1859 by Mr. W. H. Lee, at Macon, in Georgia. The history of the troupe since its foundation is somewhat curious. There is a character about negro entertainments, and even a pronunciation of the words, which is no doubt derived more faithfully from the manner and diction of the plantations, but it does not follow that actual negroes, and especially actual slaves, should be the most entertaining impersonators of slave character. An Irish carman, played by Mr. Boucicault or Mr. Falconer, or even by an Englishman, is a better type for the brogue, is a much more amusing personage than a real Irish carman brought from the street to the stage to exhibit the frolleries and recite the witticisms of Paddy. Minstrelsy had grown into an art, with its traditions as distinctly familiar to its professors and as much recognised by the public as those of the stage, and to its comic and characteristic elements had been added a certain amount of musical training and considerable description, carried to a very high pitch of technical excellence and simple beauty in execution. The management of this troupe recognised it as their part in the most business-like way within it to the provinces soon after its first appearance in Liverpool in 1866. It had succeeded, but the proprietors saw that an entertainment managed by ill-educated and recently freed slaves could only do so for a temporary time. Its very newness, and would be expected to compete in singing, in comedy, and in characteristic sketches with Ethiopians who could change their skin every night, and whose ingenious and oddly-directed studies in banjo tropes had become the most enduringly popular of entertainments. Like men of business the proprietors resolved to transform their negro company, whose attractiveness could only be ephemeral, into a white philanthropic sympathy, into a white company, which should stand second to none in all the special excellences which the patronage of the public required in this species of entertainment. Having done this the troupe returned to Liverpool, opened St. James' Hall, have played there nightly ever since, and have accumulated themselves to the public as to become an institution of the town. No one ever spent a dull evening at St. James' Hall since Oct. 31, 1870. The programme has been constantly freshened by varieties, talents of all available kinds have been laid under continual requisition; each department has been impartially kept up to the highest standard of excellence, and no resource that business, management and artistic energy could lay under contribution for such an entertainment has been neglected. Last night, in pursuance of a kindly custom established last year, the anniversary performance—brimful of humor and harmony from first to last—was made contributory to the funds of a local charity, the whole proceeds being devoted to Father Nugent's institution for rescuing and training street arabs. There was an overflowing house, and the utmost enthusiasm prevailed. Messrs. Hague and Lee have proved once again that there is nothing like doing things well. Having never disappointed the public, and always successfully divined what will please, everything argues a long continuation of the extraordinary prosperity which they have hitherto deservedly and unwaveringly enjoyed. 34-1t

JAS. H. BUDWORTH
Will shortly produce J. Holmes Grover's new sensational drama, THE SUNBURST, in Philadelphia (New York to follow), in which MR. WE THE UNDERSIGNED
Members of the Norris-Norton Comedy Combination (that was), in justice to the manager, Mr. H. Greenwall, desire to make the following statement to the profession and all others interested.—We were engaged by Mr. Greenwall for Clara Norris and John S. Norton to travel during a season of six months, the said Norris and Norton to furnish the money for salaries and all necessary expenses. The arrogance and ill breeding of the two would-be stars, whose ignorance of the common courtesies of life was only equalled by their total lack of ability and knowledge of theatrical business, created ill feeling the first week of our trip, culminating in an open rupture, and the complete casting of Norris and Norton by the company. We played through New York and Pennsylvania, losing money in spite of the hard work of manager, agent and company, what should have been the attraction being in reality a terrible drawback. From motives which Norton has had the cheek to publish since, suppressing the names of the people who earned them, were either withheld by Mr. Greenwall or obtained as personal favors to himself and company, exclusive of the stars. They brought us to New York, compelled to do so by the manager, we believe, giving as their objects a desire to escape the creditors' excitement, promising to make [illegible] New York, and left [illegible] in unexcusably shabby refusal to pay our salaries. We make this statement in justice to our manager, Mr. Greenwall, our agent, Mr. Horne, to ourselves and as a warning to other professionals who may be induced to engage with Clara Norris and John S. Norton. Alice Raymond, Virginia Marshall, Carrie Wheeler, W. J. Gilbert, Annie Morton, Joe J. Dowling, Emma Lasky, A. James. 34-1t*

MR. GREELEY'S RIDE.

AN INCIDENT OF HIS VISIT TO CALIFORNIA.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

[NOTE.—When Mr. Greeley went to California, ovations awaited him at every town. He had written powerful leaders in the Tribune in favor of the Pacific railroad, which had greatly enhanced his value in the estimation of the Golden State people. The California Stage Company was to carry him from Folsom to Placerville, and owing to some delay of arrangements, the vehicle was not in readiness to depart until late in the afternoon. The driver, a man possessed of spunk as well as muscle, stood five feet 'leven, And was thirty years of age. Mr. Greeley was to be in Placerville at 7 o'clock, P. M., as will be seen by the "orders" given Mr. Henry Monk, the driver.]

I.

"This great man must be there by seven!"
Were the orders given Henry Monk.
"The great man shall be there, by heaven!"
Rejoined the driver of the stage.
From Folsom to Placerville 'twas forty miles—

II.

"All aboard!" yelled Henry Monk—'twas late in the afternoon—
The great man got in the stage—he of the good Tribune;
The road was quite muddy and a little up grade,
And for three or four miles they very slow progress made;
Not yet had they watered, not yet had they bogged,
As up the divide road the stage horses lagged.
"The Placerville people propose me to jete!"
And I have apprehension we'll get there too late."
Thus spoke the great man to him of the borders—
Cried Henry Monk:—"I've got my orders!"
Six miles out of town, and the road was quite smooth,
But after that distance it did not improve;
When, half a mile further—a half, I said, boy—
When half a mile further they struck corduroy!

III.

"Sir!" said the great man, "there's no fear of disaster,
I must be there by seven; suppose you drive faster!"
Monk didn't get angry—he'd long lived on the borders—
But simply replied:—"Yes; I've got my orders!"
Then down with the whip—old style, twelve stranned 'un—
Such as bull-whackers use to drive mules in tandem;
The stage struck a stump and turned half way o'er—
Not before since they started had the great man made a roar—
But he did at this juncture, and lustily, too:
Hold up, there! dod rot you! Hold up there! Whoa!
It don't matter much—if—hold!" Greeley bawled;
Still the pace was not slackened—the cattle still hauled—
And presently a bald head popped through the coach roof;
"Look a-here, you grand rascal! Look a-here! Hold slow!
Are those government horses, you hound of the borders!"
But all that Monk said, was:—"I've got my orders!"

IV.

Then Greeley's white hat blew off of his head—
Quite exhausted, he fainted, fell back, almost dead.
Two frantic wood-choppers seized Greeley's old tile—
By this time the stage was away a good mile—
They pulled it and tore it 'mid grunts and great groans,
And then took the pieces to their own hearthstones,
Perhaps as mementos of the great man's ride—
They did it, however, and Greeley defied.
By this time the stage coach had reached Mud Springs—
Mr. Greeley was getting accustomed to "things"—
Placerville's delegation met the old caravan:
"Is Greeley aboard, sir?" cried a very old man.
"He was a few miles back," Henry Monk said,
"Through the top of my coach I saw his bald head;
My orders are these:—'Git him there by seven'—
It lacks fifteen minutes—I'll do it by heaven!"
Look-a-here, Mr. Monk, "the committee man cried,
"I presume Mr. Greeley is sick of this ride;
We have a brass band here, thirty ladies in white,
And a hundred good torches to make the way light—
We're here to escort him: you can't say us nay!
The procession will form, and the band will play!"
Grim last to the marshals some very bold;
But he needn't have done it—the committee was sold.)
"I'm told you my orders—(he stage company pay.
Let go of my leaders! (Git out of my way!"
And down went the whip—the leaders then jumped—
The committee man rolled, and on the stage thumped;
O'erturned the band wagon, broke up the formed line,
And it's needless to say that Monk was "on time."

New Orleans, Oct. 25th, 1872. LARRY BRADFORD.

A TRULY JEALOUS OTHELLO.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

BY LE VOILA.

Some thirty years ago private theatricals were an all pervading pastime with the younger members of our community dwelling within the lower portion of the city, which, at that time, was inhabited not only by a large army of merchants' clerks, but by a great number of commercial gentlemen of the olden school. It must be remembered that, at that period, few hotels existed above the upper end of the park, and those among them held in the highest estimation were mainly located along Broadway, or in the vicinity of the Bowling green. The old merchants of New York were emphatically devoted to theatricals as a cardinal amusement, for, having "survived their dancing days" and the vagaries of a juvenile existence, no more agreeable pastime could be afforded them than a visit to the pit of the Park Theatre, and a critical survey of the performances of celebrated and time honored worthies identified with the fortunes of the old Drury. The drama with the Park pitite was not a mere amusement, but an object of sincere adoration. He went to the theatre with the self same sentiments inducing his attendance upon church service, as he viewed both acts as emanations from a sacred duty, neglect in the observance of either of which he regarded as decidedly detrimental to his reputation as a member of good society. Consequently, through constant and habitual attendance at the Theatre, for the thorough-bred play-goer recognized implicitly the claims of Simpson to the management of the only dramatic temple upon the island, the Park pitite grew unconsciously into an astute critic, into whom both the text and the actor became matters of familiarity.

The younger members of the commercial generation entered still more heartily into veneration of things theatrical than did their elders, who found it impossible to rebuke devotion to an amusement sanctified by their own example. But this admiration took a totally different shape from that evinced by the "grave and reverend seniors," inasmuch as, instead of limiting their appreciation of Booth, Maywood, Clarke, Placide, and the host of local stars illuminating the Thespian firmament to mere laudation, it burst forth in a sturdy emulation of the very deeds of these exemplary actors, and in an attempted imitation of their words, figures and gestures upon mimic stages, surrounded by accessories of theatrical creation.

There were, about that time, three private theatrical associations of considerable note in contemporary competition for praise among the junior devotees to dramatic eclat, a grave distinction as to social rank had been inaugurated and preserved, while the temples devoted to their service gloried in greater or less splendor, proportionately to their owners' wealth and standing. Upon Broadway stood the ostentatious hall of audience of the Garrick Club, upon the third floor of a noted house of resort, with a cosy auditorium, an imitation lobby, a gaudy proscenium and a well equipped stage—diminutive, it is true, still large enough to afford convenient scope for the display of histrionic ability in law students, college undergraduates and mercantile clerks of rather mature years.

On the east side of the town, in close proximity to Franklin square, another miniature temple reared its head, over looking a repository of second hand wares and merchandise, not, to be sure, so gorgeous as the creation of the noble Bohemians of the intimate Garrick, but equally as popular, for those who trod its boards were earnest youth, hanging upon the outskirts of the then fashionable part of the town.

And then, again, upon the borders of the "Swamp" could be found a much larger theatre for private representation, within a block or so of the Park Theatre itself, whose weekly audience comprised a choice selection from the down town gentlemen's sons, and of belles drawn through the cellar doors of mansions tenanted by that race of leather dressers and of wealthy mechanics who, without aspiring to aristocracy, stood high in the scale of influential gentility.

During the comparative infancy of the order, it had been the wont of the masonic fraternity to congregate at a public hall placed beneath the tutelage of the patron saint, in which a commodious apartment had been set apart for communications of the grand lodge. This chamber had been decorated by Jefferson, the scenic artist of the Park Theatre, with mystic emblems and pictorial allegories, to such a degree as to excite the passing marvel of townsmen unaccustomed to the glories of even the most unpretending temple, but when their mason waxed wealthy and pretentious, the ancient St. John's Hall, in Frankfort street, fell into premature decay through desertion of grand officers, translated to the gothic building in Broadway. Then chanced it that this deserted temple was converted from a shrine to Hiram into one for Thespis, and stood open in grand guardianship of the band of swamp angels, treading, though at a great distance, in the footsteps of Garrick, Cooke and Kean.

The dramatic children of St. John flourished amazingly and to their hearts' content, and might have lingered until the plough of advancing civilization overturned the foundations of the structure had not, in an evil hour, internecine strife occurred behind the scenes which sewed fatal seeds of dissension among the Thespian crew. Discord, once among the happy dramatic family, fanned the flames of jealousy and of envious rage with noxious wrath, until the temple of amateur players became first a mockery, then a scorn, and, finally, a thing of the past.

The great gun of the Johannites was a stalwart youth of more than ordinary histrionic abilities, who had risen from an untried neophyte, through various stages of mirth, comedy and tragedy, to the proud position of manager of the house. Loud voiced and athletic, he was a hero with the audience; fair featured and insinuating, he was a favorite with the fair sex; majestic and strong-minded, he moulded his masculine companions to his will; in a word, Bob D—— ruled everybody before and upon the stage.

Honor and victory rarely exist without envy and jealousy, and so it proved in the case of our volunteer Garrick. There was in the troupe a subtle, wily lawyer's clerk, whose proud soul revolted at the idea of playing second fiddle to a mere leather dresser's apprentice, yet, being somewhat of a crafty nature, Harry Vanconcern, hid the anger passion beneath a sonorous smile, and bottled injured pride within the recesses of his own breast, consoling himself that the beauties of the Swamp would some day be made aware that within his ambitious person glowed a fire which would consume them and his hated rival.

There was still another member of the Thespians to whom Bob's dominion was offensive, still not obnoxious; a gay, rollicking Hibernian compositor, who played high tragedy with a brogue and low comedy with a drawl. Barney D. was too reckless a man to pay attention to the slurs of vulgar critics, and too frank and honest a soul to give expression to a jealousy he did not feel at heart. Barney boasted, nevertheless, a controlling weakness, and that was an unbridled predilection for the fair sex, with vanity sufficient to convince himself that his advances must prove irresistible.

In course of a season of triumph, which had wreathed Bob's curling locks with a full crop of laurels, it came to his turn to name a night for his benefit. Not that he expected to reap any financial harvest from the occasion, for with amateurs, scorning to bestow involuntary charity upon juvenile delinquents in accordance with legal requirements for a license, tickets of admission were distributed gratuitously, but the "benefit," as it was termed, bestowed upon the beneficiary plenary authority to designate a bill of plays, or of parts, particularly consonant with his individual taste. Bob, taking advantage o. this privilege, resolved upon astonishing the nerves of his admiring friends, and of freezing the marrow in their bones, by being performed with intense success at the leading theatres. In addition to displaying his personal superiority in this particular part, Bob designed to avail himself of the opportunity through imitating the practice of benefit takers from time immemorial in introducing a debutante to the notice of his friends, and thereby indirectly displaying his seductive powers over, as he styled her in the bills, "a young, fascinating and beautiful syren, her first appearance upon either the public or private stage—a dramatic miracle."

To propitiate his rivals, Bob had diplomatically assigned to the envious law clerk the prominent part of Iago, while to the jocose Barney he committed custody of Michael Cassio, much to the consternation of Emilia of the Knolls of the destined evening proved to be one of those dilapidated actresses, whose professional performances had been limited to casual appearances upon the stage of a minor theatre of questionable notoriety. Still, within his own heart, Barney registered a vow that, should the debutante cast for Desdemona prove the fascinating syren managerially represented, he would compensate for the indignity through winning her love, despite rivalry of the sooty Moor. Rehearsal came, and with it appeared the new actress, whom Bob proudly and grandiloquently introduced to his companions, adding, by way of embellishment, that it had been only through his energetic persuasion that the youthful beauty had been induced to participate in a single night's entertainment.

Desdemona was decidedly good looking, and, upon glancing upon her smirking, smiling features, Michael Cassio became smitten at first sight, and concluded that he would go and win, notwithstanding the undisguised prediction which Bob, festive bachelor as he was, exhibited, as he waited upon and gave stage directions towards his protege, who, to the surprise of the amateurs, rehearsed her part with a nonchalance and ease unexpected in a new beginner.

"Where did you get your syren from?" covertly insinuated Iago, as Othello rubbed his hands gleefully, while noting the sensation Desdemona created.

"Three weeks ago I met her by chance," responded Bob, with the vivacity of a lady killer, and presented her with a ticket to our dress circle," and he added, with a chuckle, "she came, she saw, and I conquered!"

Barney overheard the egotistical remark, and his warm Irish blood mounted to his very eye lashes, as he darted a look of incredulity upon his manager.

"That don't explain who she is," rejoined Harry, smiling at the impression made upon his Hibernian colleagues; "how came she to come among us? Where does she hail from?"

"Fact is," responded Bob most pompously, "that is a mystery. This I will tell you. As I was strolling, a sunny afternoon, beneath the shade trees of the Park, this lovely creature stood before me. 'Ain't thou,' says she, 'not the Romeo I saw the other night?' 'The same,' says I. 'Why was I not your Juliet?' says she. 'I wish you were,' says I. 'I'll be better still, says she. 'My what?' says I. 'Your Desdemona,' says she. And that's how the thing happened."

"You don't believe that cock and bull story?" enquired Harry, as he touched glasses with Barney after rehearsal had ceased; when, after rehearsal, the two crossed legs beneath a table in the refreshment chamber of St. John's, "do you swallow it?"

"Why not?" rejoined the printer somewhat earnestly.

"Didn't you play Romeo for your benefit?" suggested his friend.

"Indeed and I did," quoth Barney, suggestively, "and it was the best thing ever did by our company, so it was."

"Can't you see," continued Harry, after a second's rumination, "it's only one of Bob's dodges. The girl saw you, Barney, and mistook old slyboots for you, and he's took advantage of you because, you see, he's no Romeo to you."

"To be sure he aint," interposed Barney energetically.

"Now, then, I'd be even with him if I were in your place," remarked the cunning lawyer, confidentially, "I wouldn't be cut out by that pompous swell head."

"Indeed and I wont," responded Barney, doggedly.

"I'd grab her right under his nose," suggested Iago.

"Indeed and I will!" retorted Cassio, with determination.

Unaware of the conspiracy thus ingeniously set on foot to rob him of his fancied lady love, Bob persisted in his marked attentions to the "dramatic miracle," as rehearsal succeeded rehearsal, until the eventful evening of the benefit arrived. In the meanwhile the susceptible heart of Barney, at view of the beauty, swelled beneath a smouldering flame, which would at times burst forth in passionate glow had not the wiser counsels of his subtle friend interposed to check the impetuosity of Cassio's natural temper. Once or twice, when the managerial back was turned, did Barney cast upon the debutante glances of amorous sweetness, which, to his encouragement, were returned with a coquetish complacency.

"You'll have her all alone to yourself in the green-room, Barney," suggested the cool Iago, laughing in his sleeve at the idea of playing his dramatic character so perfectly to the life behind the scenes, "and when old Buskins on the stage you can draw it strong."

"Indeed and I will," returned Cassio, with a smile.

Bob's benefit came at last, and the performers being well up in their parts, our manager proceeded to array himself with super-ordinary care, according to the conventional ideas then in fashion of intense indignation upon the humiliated manager. "I'm going home."

"Indeed, and I'll be after going with you," interposed the compositor, an affectionate leer gleaming in his eye, and, as the fair Desdemona gave vent neither in utterance nor in the language of signs, to any disapproval of his design, the duo fled off in the direction of the dressing-rooms.

"What's to be done, Harry?" moaned, or rather spoke, the crestfallen manager, as his eyes followed the retreating pair.

"We can't double in their parts," remarked Iago, contemplating the prospective chance of publicly humiliating his domineering rival, "you must send the house home."

"Suppose you make a speech to the audience, Harry," interposed Bob, in a tone of persuasive entreaty.

"It can't be done, Bob, responded the crafty law apprentice; "it's your benefit, and you must do it."

"What shall I say?" murmured the manager, in despair.

"Oh anything, Bob; you're good at such things; terrible accident, sudden illness, or any infernal lie."

While Bob hesitated, the mutterings of wrath from the audience augmented painfully, completely drowning the feeble orchestral endeavors to override the storm. There was no longer time for delay, as the bursting of the storm would be fraught with danger, hence Othello, abstractedly and unmindful as to the direful confusion wrought upon his visage and raiment at Cassio's hands, descended the wooden steps and stalked mechanically down to the footlights.

"Ladies and gentlemen, believe me, I am injured"—and a wild, hoarse roar of laughter interrupted the managerial speech, as Bob faced the yelling crowd—"deeply in my feelings," continued Othello.

"Nose!" screamed an urchin from the gallery.

"Villain!" shouted Othello, in his best stage tone.

"Don't be alter bothering us," urged Cassio, pettishly, and he leered upon Desdemona tenderly, "don't you see we are rehearsing a private scene, bad luck to you."

"Don't do anything rash, my dear Bob," quoth Iago, who now appeared within the chamber, in a coaxing manner.

"Sir!" sputtered out the manager, gnashing his teeth as he addressed Cassio, "begone hence, I command you."

"Indeed and I won't," stubbornly responded Barney, disengaging himself from Desdemona, and assuming a very unsteady perpendicular, "and I not played my part out."

"As for you, vile woman," quoth Othello, tragically.

He did not finish, for Desdemona, catching the tenor of his sentence, uttered a dismal shriek and stretched herself spasmodically upon the floor, her head buried beneath the table.

"See what you've done, you dirty blackguard," shouted Cassio, indignantly, as he pointed to the fallen lady. "Take that for your pains, you murdering villain!" And with these words the pewter pot, with its liquid contents, went whizzing through the air until it reached the head of Othello, carrying off his turban and deluging his snow-white raiment with a quart of frothy porter.

"I'll pay you for that, you Irish thief!" shouted the enraged Othello, throwing himself into attitude and advancing upon his antagonist with a one, two, landing the air.

"Time!" murmured Iago, anticipating the culmination of his diplomacy, while Cassio, seemingly suddenly sobered, placed himself in a position of defence.

"It's fight you mean, you black muzzled spalpeen," shouted the generally peaceable Barney. "I'm the boy to accommodate the likes of you; indeed I am."

In order to verify his declaration, Cassio struck out first with his left hand, and then with his right, with such pugilistic skill that this latter blow, landing upon Othello's rather prominent nasal organ, sent him reeling against the wall, while a current of claret spouted from the injured member, fairly deluging the white muslin robes of the prostrate Desdemona, who at once recovered from her swoon, and arising, threw herself between the combatants.

"First blood!" ejaculated Iago, and mindful of the reports he had read concerning prize fights, drew forth the identical embroidered pocket handkerchief, which was designed to serve as evidence of Desdemona's infidelity to her nuptial vows, and proceeded to sponge Othello by bathing his injured nose, and wiping a circular section of his face in the centre of which the bleeding organ protruded.

"My best pocket handkerchief!" exclaimed Desdemona, in violent excitement, as aroused from her swoon. She rose and wrenched the article, stained with blood and discolored with lamp black, from the hand of the ministering Iago, who gazed in amazement at the comic transformation his diplomacy had wrought in regard to the features of the suffering manager. Still he kept his peace and went on with his nursing, until the flow from Othello's nose finally ceased, leaving it encased in a lava-like crust of clotted blood.

When stillness was partially restored to the green-room, the stamping of feet, accompanied by whistling and other noises, could be heard issuing from the body of the auditorium, plainly announcing the disapprobation of the audience at the unseemly and prolonged interruption of the play. The orchestra, an amateur upon the accordeon, with a paid professor upon a one-keyed flute, though thrice repeating their choicest concerted performance, vainly endeavored to cast musical oil upon the troubled waters; still the discord of the spectators drowned their best efforts, and harmony in a picture storm of impatience. "Curtain up, stage waiting," shouted the amateur officiating in the important but humble capacity of call boy. This summons immediately quelled the green-room row and brought the maltreated manager to a realization of his executive duties. So he turned piteously to his companions and pleaded in a gracious tone:—

"What's to be done; who's first to go on?"

"I'm not going to show myself in this plight," quoth Desdemona, resolutely, as she pointed to the stains of gore, drawn from the nose of Othello, decking her muslin robe.

"Dear me!" ejaculated Bob, apologetically.

"I'm not going to stay here to be insulted," continued the young lady, with a look of intense indignation upon the humiliated manager. "I'm going home."

"Indeed, and I'll be after going with you," interposed the compositor, an affectionate leer gleaming in his eye, and, as the fair Desdemona gave vent neither in utterance nor in the language of signs, to any disapproval of his design, the duo fled off in the direction of the dressing-rooms.

"What's to be done, Harry?" moaned, or rather spoke, the crestfallen manager, as his eyes followed the retreating pair.

"We can't double in their parts," remarked Iago, contemplating the prospective chance of publicly humiliating his domineering rival, "you must send the house home."

"Suppose you make a speech to the audience, Harry," interposed Bob, in a tone of persuasive entreaty.

"It can't be done, Bob, responded the crafty law apprentice; "it's your benefit, and you must do it."

"What shall I say?" murmured the manager, in despair.

"Oh anything, Bob; you're good at such things; terrible accident, sudden illness, or any infernal lie."

While Bob hesitated, the mutterings of wrath from the audience augmented painfully, completely drowning the feeble orchestral endeavors to override the storm. There was no longer time for delay, as the bursting of the storm would be fraught with danger, hence Othello, abstractedly and unmindful as to the direful confusion wrought upon his visage and raiment at Cassio's hands, descended the wooden steps and stalked mechanically down to the footlights.

"Ladies and gentlemen, believe me, I am injured"—and a wild, hoarse roar of laughter interrupted the managerial speech, as Bob faced the yelling crowd—"deeply in my feelings," continued Othello.

"Nose!" screamed an urchin from the gallery.

"Bardolph!" suggested a critic from the first tier.

Bob, wholly frustrated in his design of speech making, had now time to reflect upon the sad figure he must cut, but the audience viewed the havoc more faithfully than could the wounded hero, without comprehending the cause making so serious a change in Othello's appearance.

"Wash your face," shouted a facetious auditor.

"Pipe-clay your trowserloons!" yelled a second.

"Ring the curtain down," said Iago behind the scenes.

The mandate was obeyed and the curtain descended, leaving Othello speechless and immovable in front of the orchestra, a monument of injured dignity and a target for the loose pennies in the playful spectators' pockets. This shower of coppers awakened the manager from his lethargy, for, without pausing to make a conventional bow, he turned his back to the audience and disappeared behind the painted cloth.

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

CUPID'S WOUND.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, BY PHELAN PUDGIN.

A bee stung Cupid and young Cupid cried,
Fast flowed his tears at Mother Venus' side.
"You little wretch," she said, "when you are stung
Your tender heart with anguish deep is wrung,
But when your arrow cleaves two hearts, their pain
Leads you to try your little game again.
You cut and thrust, with joy a wound you see,
Thousands times worse than puncture of a bee."

A TRAGICAL OCCURRENCE.
A Father Shot by His Son.

Some time ago Mr. Tanner, an old and respected citizen of Tappantown, N. J., despairing of keeping his vicious son within bounds at home, procured employment for him in New York. The father at that time told George that this was to be his last chance for reformation. He must either mend his ways or be disinherited. And so the young man, to whom the temptations of Tappantown had proved so alluring, was sent to New York to learn morals. He was discharged from the store in less than a month for his vicious conduct. He then went into the book agency business. He continued to visit his family in Tappantown, and usually succeeded, through the influence of his sisters, in extracting money from his father.

About two months ago George was accompanied in one of his visits home by a young woman of great beauty and accomplishments. He introduced her as his wife, and exhibited a certificate of marriage. When he returned to New York his wife remained with his father's family. She was introduced by his sisters into the best society, and fairly gained the affections of Mr. Tanner by her winning ways and lady-like accomplishments. It was hoped by the members of the family that George's wife would be the means of reconciling father and son, and she was warmly cherished by all. About a fortnight ago, however, Mr. Tanner learned that his son had not been married at all, whereat, in a fit of ungovernable rage and without waiting to consult with George, he turned the beautiful woman out of doors. This fact was, however, kept secret by the family until the following Monday, when George returned to Tappantown. Then for the first time he learned that his supposed wife was wandering homeless. A bitter quarrel was the result, and the family were up very late that night. Mr. Tanner upbraided his son, and George protested loudly that the lady was his wife. Everybody in the house went to bed in a most uncomfortable state.

On the morning of the 12th inst. the quarrel was renewed. In the altercation Mr. Tanner struck his son with a heavy piece of wood, knocking him down. George sprang up, drew his pistol, fired upon his father and ran from the house. The ball penetrated just below the right nipple, passing downward. It is thought that Mr. Tanner cannot recover. George was caught by Constable Lawrence, who started to take him to Hackensack. At 9 o'clock that night, however, neither officer nor prisoner had been seen in the village, and it is rumored that young Tanner has escaped from the constable. When told of the serious nature of his wounds, Mr. Tanner begged that his son might not be prosecuted. He said:—

"I provoked him to it. I struck him. It was all my fault. God forgive me !"

A JILTED MAIDEN'S REVENGE.

A young woman, rejoicing in the alliterative and romantic name of Mary Ann Murphy, and residing in Princes street, Dundee, Scotland, had been courted by a young man of the name of Henry McKenzie, residing in Overgate. Some time ago Mary Ann had, in the course of one of their courting strolls, taken her sweetheart to the house of an acquaintance in Lower Blackscroft, a married woman, who, along with her daughter, a blooming lass of about seventeen summers, lives apart from the husband and father. After several visits to this house, the ardor of the laborer towards his Mary Ann began to cool, and she began to suspect that her gallant Lothario had been smitten with the charms of the young damsel, if not of those of the mother, to whom, in the guilelessness of her heart, she had in an evil hour introduced him. He soon evinced a desire to take farewell of his own Mary Ann, and ultimately broke off the correspondence, and, as she averred, became a frequent visitor at the house of her previous friend, but now rival. Having on the night of the 2d inst., learned that her truant swain was enjoying himself in the house referred to, she, fired with jealousy and thirsting for revenge, sought his retreat. On entering the house she found there were, besides the mother and daughter, another young woman, two young men, and her own false lover, the latter luxuriating on a couch in blissful ease. With undaunted courage, the jilted fair one made straight at the faithless lover, who, apparently revelling in some fond dream, was all unconscious of her presence until she had dealt him several lusty blows with such telling effect upon a prominent part of his facial development that she "turned on the tap," and the "claret" flowed freely. So daring, prompt and energetic was the act that, with the exception of the old lady, all the inmates of the house were spell-bound and could render the unfortunate young man no assistance. Having regained her composure, the mistress of the house succeeded in ejecting the unwelcome intruder, but the latter, still unsatisfied and thirsting for more revenge, wreaked her vengeance on the luckless glass of the windows, and in an amazingly short space of time seventeen pans of glass lay shivered to atoms upon the floor, and, through the apertures, fourteen stones were speedily projected at the devoted inmates. An alarm was given, the protectors of the peace were called, and the irate young lady was given into custody. At the police court the magistrates held that the charge had been fully substantiated, and fined the unfortunate girl 10s., with the alternative of ten days' imprisonment.

A CLERGYMAN'S WIFE RUNS OFF WITH A TAILOR.—The leading topic of gossip in Monticello, N. Y., has been the elopement of a pretty village lass. Her name, says a correspondent of the N. Y. Sun of the 13th inst., is Flora Allen, employed in Thurston's tailoring shop in this village. The person with whom she has cast her lot is J. H. Bugsbee, alias Buckler. Ten years ago he made his appearance at Grahamsville, in this county, and hung out his shingle as merchant tailor. He joined the Methodist Church, of which the Rev. Mr. Ketchum was pastor. So devoted was he in religious matters that he was received in the pastor's family. The minister's wife was good looking, full of fun, and in time she thought more of the tailor than of her husband, and one day, while the latter was away, the two decamped. The minister procured a divorce, and two years afterward the runaways went to Ellenville, Ulster county, Bugsbee having changed his name to Buckler. They were subsequently married, and had two children. The husband did a thriving business and made money. About six weeks ago Bugsbee came to Monticello and put up at the Mansion House, announcing himself as the agent for Davis' sewing machine. He sold several machines, and in some way became acquainted with Miss Allen, whom he cajoled into the belief that he was the son of a wealthy Florida planter, who had educated him for the ministry, but that, not liking the profession, he had run away and made his way in the world without any assistance from the "old man." On Friday Bugsbee procured a livery rig, and the two drove off in the night to Middletown, where they left the horse, taking the cars eastward. Arriving at Jersey City, the girl wrote to her mother that she and Bugsbee were married, and that they would be a thousand miles away when that letter was received.

OFF FROM GEORGETOWN.—A sad and extraordinary elopement and abandonment of a family of two children, aged two and five years, by a lady who has hitherto borne an unblemished and irreproachable character, with a man many years her senior in age and closely connected by ties of consanguinity, occurred in Georgetown a few days ago, says the Boston Herald, adding that "the lady, whose name is withheld, is young and pretty and but little known out of her own family circle, where she was a great favorite. The man is reported to be a journalist, very rich, a returned Californian, and to have had a previous domestic infelicity, and it is whispered that he has been obliged by the courts to settle an annuity upon a divorced wife in the west. Something more than a year ago this destroyer returned from Europe, and being destitute of a permanent home, was received into the family and sympathy of the people in question, and being of a quiet disposition, employed his leisure in an occasional literary effort for his San Francisco paper, and, it is said, writing for a New York commercial paper a series of articles. On Oct. 24th he was, as alleged, about to return to California, and the lady determined to see him off by accompanying him to Boston, promising to return in the next train; but failing to do so no suspicions were aroused until the day following, when, wonder being expressed at her non-appearance, search was made, which proved that she had taken her clothes and valuables with her. The man, whose name is Daniel Glines, is a native of Byfield, where he married his first wife, his second wife, now dead, having been the wife of a German citizen of this state before she eloped with him, as the Georgetown woman has now done. Glines is a man of talent and has been secretary of the state board of education of California.

THE RITE OF CIRCUMCISION PERFORMED.—The Jewish rite of circumcision, as ordained by the Hebrew Bible, was recently performed on a child of James Colonese, who has for a number of years kept the fruit stand at the entrance of the Merchants' Exchange. The rite was performed at his residence in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives of the family, together with several gentlemen from the exchange, who had some curiosity to see the ceremony. When all was ready the officiating rabbi, Rev. Mr. Kutner, placed a table at the head of the room, on which he placed a large square pillow, a couple of glasses of wine and some water, bandages, &c. He then called for the baby, which, as it was only eight days old, was very weak and small, and had the appearance of blushing all over. A gentleman present took a very handsome silk shawl, striped red and white, placed it over his shoulders lady fashion, and took the baby from the attendant, held it up before the preacher, who opened a Hebrew Bible and read a few sentences, responses being made by all present, in the same tongue, at the end of each sentence or petition. The gentleman holding the baby then got up and sat down on the table, holding the baby as a shoemaker holds the shoe he is mending, and, in the twinkling of an eye, the operation was done. After the operation another gentleman put on the shawl in the same manner; taking the baby in his arms he poured a small quantity of dark red wine upon it, and repeated a few Hebrew sentences, which finished the ceremony, and it was pronounced that the parents, the name as a bride to be congratulated at her wedding.—St. Louis Democrat.

A ROMAN WEDDING.—A few days ago Donna Anna Maria Torlonia and Don Giulio Borghese were married in Rome. The lady is daughter and heiress of Prince Torlonia, and the groom is the third son of Prince Borghese by his second wife, Donna Teresa de la Rochefoucauld. Prince Borghese's first wife was Lady Gwendoline Talbot, daughter of the late Earl of Shrewsbury, and sister of Lady Mary Talbot, who married Prince Doria Pamphil. The bride takes her husband an immediate marriage portion of 4,375,000 francs, and the succession to one of the most colossal heritages in Europe, nine tenths of which is in landed property of rapidly rising value. The ceremony was first civil at the Capital, and then religious at the private chapel of the Torlonias. The bride, who is a little under the average height, is a brunette, with an abundance of rich black hair. She responded to the Syndic's questions with a clear, bright round "sì," which could be heard in every corner of the room, throwing up her head slightly at the same time. Many magnificent acts of charity were performed, and among others 50,000 francs, the united offering of the Princes Borghese and Torlonia, have been sent to the Cardinal Vicar for distribution among the poor of the Roman parishes. Among the many valuable wedding presents is a beautiful ebony casket sent to the bride by His Holiness, Pius IX. It is richly inlaid with silver, and has a small statuette of silver on the lid. It contained a beautiful picture of the Virgin, painted on rock crystal; a fan of great value, richly carved, and a missal exquisitely bound, together with which also was a service of linen damask for six persons. Cardinal Antonelli's present was in the form of a richly wrought cross of gold.

AN ELOPEMENT IN LONG ISLAND.—Mrs. Whitehead Abrams, of Pearsall's Corners, L. I., is reported as having disappeared on the night of the 4th inst. with the fascinating Mr. Richard Slavin, taking with her all her husband's valuables.

BASE BALL.

THE MUTUAL CLUB RECORD FOR 1872.

The professional organization known as the "Mutual Club of New York" closed play for the season of 1872 on November 1st in a friendly encounter with the Mutual Club of Waterbury, Conn. They began on April 20th in a game on the Union Grounds, L. I., in which their nine scored 13 to the field side's one, the nine including Mills, c.; Cummings, p.; Start, Hatfield and Boyd, on the bases; Pearce, s. s.; and Bechtel, Eggler and Hicks, in the field, McMullen pitching on the field side. The following day they took a trip to Baltimore and Washington, and in their first championship match sustained defeat at the hands of the newly organized Baltimore nine. This and the experience of their games in Washington led them to make a change, Hicks taking C. Mills' place as catcher for the season. In April they won four out of the five championship matches played that month, but in May lost three out of six regular games, the Boston and Troy clubs defeating them rather badly. In June their success was noteworthy, as out of nine regular matches played they won six; but their June record included the most signal defeat, viz., in their second match with the Athletics, in which they were beaten by 19 to 6. During July they lost but one game, and marked their victories with a defeat of the Athletics by a score of 9 to 6, it being the first time the Athletic Club had ever been "Chicagoed." In August, out of nine regular championship games, they were successful in but three, the most disastrous month for the nine of the regular season. September's play, however, offset the errors of that of August, for out of eleven games they won eight, their victories including two defeats of the Boston nine. October's proceedings did not add to the credit of the club; on the contrary, it lowered the reputation that their contests ceased to be attractive, and from gatherings of two or three thousand at their early summer matches, the attendance at the games in the latter part of the season fell off to as many hundreds, the loss of prestige being necessarily very damaging to the pecuniary interests of the organization. Finally, at the close of a season marked by no less than seventy odd contests, we find the nine charged with nearly thirty defeats, the greatest number recorded against the club in a single season's play, and more than any other professional organization ever sustained. The question which naturally arises under such circumstances is "why is this thusly?" The only answer we can make is, lack of discipline.

The Mutual nine of 1872 included one of the best, if not the very best, catchers in the professional fraternity. They also had the services of one of the most effective of strategic pitchers. Their first baseman and centre fielder had no superiors, and their short stop was one of the ablest of the veteran corps of the old Atlantic champion nine, his ability as a general of a field being noteworthy besides which, they were assisted by an excellent left fielder, and one of the strongest of players at second base, having, also, two strong players from Philadelphia to complete their force. Under the captaincy of Pearce the nine displayed a degree of skill in fielding that was far ahead of any previous efforts of the Mutual Club nines, and in batting skill, and in playing the "points" of the game they were second to few if any of their opponents. And yet, despite these advantages, the record of the club shows a list of nearly thirty defeats, twenty-one of which were sustained in the championship arena. If the plea is put forth that the defeats in "exhibition" games are of no account, such excuse falls to the ground when it is considered that there is no just reason why an "exhibition game" should not be as important a contest to win as any other class of games. But unfortunately these contests are apparently set aside as a class of games which legitimately admit of being played to serve such special purposes as the betting business may suggest as most advantageous in pecuniary returns.

At any rate, these mere gate-money contests are set down by the public at large as games open to hippodroming, and hence they have long since ceased to be worthy of patronage. It is said that the present managers have secured a very strong team for the campaign of 1873, including Hicks, Mathews, Start, Hatfield, Ferguson, Radcliff, Gedney, Eggler and Fisher. As a matter of reference, we give below the full record of the Mutual nine for the season of 1872:—

The above record shows a total of 51 regular professional games played, of which they won 30, lost 19, and had two tie games. Out of the 51 games they scored double figures in 22. They were "Chicagoed" in one game, scored only a single run in two matches, and but 2 runs in five games. They "Chicagoed" their opponents in two games, and disposed of them for less than 3 runs in seven games, their adversaries scoring double figures in but 13 out of the 51 games.

The following is the record of their amateur and "exhibition" contests:—

HARVARD CLASS RACE.

The annual race between six-oared crews representing the different classes in Harvard College, came off on the usual course on the Charles river, at Boston, Mass., on Saturday afternoon, 9th inst. It was some time before they got into position, the Juniors having the inside next the river wall, the Seniors next, then the Sophomores, and outside the Freshman crew. After some backing and filling the word was given and they got away together, but before the Freshmen had pulled half a dozen strokes they broke a stretcher and ceased rowing, when the other crews were called back by the judges, and the Freshman boat was taken to the club house for repairs. This took so long that more than half of the spectators left, supposing the race was postponed; but a few minutes before 5 o'clock the crews again got in their boats and, pulling out into position, got a very even send-off. The Juniors got away with a strong, quick stroke, which gave them a slight lead after they had pulled 50 yards, the Freshman crew being next in order and working finely. The latter, however, swung entirely out of the course by wild steering, which was continued for a full half mile, and when this was discovered their chance of winning the race had passed. About one-third of the way up the course the Juniors had a lead of an open length, the Seniors and Sophomores being close together and in danger of fouling every stroke, but the latter pulled off and avoided a collision. Further up the river there was a prospect of a like trouble, but this was again avoided and all three of the boats struck for the stake-boat. By this time the Freshman crew had got on the right course, but their bad steering had left them some distance behind. The Seniors attempted to make the turn inside the Juniors, but did not succeed, the latter getting around the boat two lengths in advance, the Seniors going next, with the Sophomores close up with them, and the Freshman crew a couple of lengths in the rear. The race home was quite exciting as there was so little difference in distance between the boats. The Juniors maintained their advantage and this they increased by keeping well under the shelter of the wall. Finally they passed the line in 14 minutes 30 seconds, the Sophomores coming down next, but owing to their fouling against the Judge's boat they lost several seconds and the second place was given to the Seniors. The Freshman crew, which was allowed fifteen seconds as a lap-streak, was last. The following is a summary of the race:—

HARVARD CLASS RACE—CHARLES RIVER COURSE, Saturday, Nov. 9th, 1872.—For Graduates' Cup; distance two miles; for six-oared boats—lap-streaks allowed 15 seconds.

Junior Crew (shell)—W. G. White, stroke; W. Burry, A. L. Devens, G. S. Stubbs, H. S. Harding; P. Dana, bow. Time, 14min. 30secs.

Senior Crew (shell)—E. P. Bliss, stroke; J. S. Swain, J. O. Shaw, Jr., R. Dickey, T. Daland, H. B. Stone, bow. Time, 15min. 30secs.

Sophomore Crew (shell)—C. W. Wetmore, stroke; M. H. Prince, F. S. Gould, S. W. Clark, F. R. Appleton; W. Hartwell, bow. Time, 15min. 21secs.

Freshman Crew (lapstreak)—C. F. Hodges, stroke; S. C. Bacon, W. F. Weld, G. A. Nickerson, G. W. Greene; Isaac Thorn as, bow. Time, with allowance off, 15min. 22secs.

The judges were Messrs. G. F. Roberts, '71; E. N. Fenno, '66; Thomas Nelson, '66; R. C. Hooper, '72, and A. P. Loring, '69, at the starting point, and C. H. Williams, '71, and N. G. Reed, '71, at the stake-boat, and they gave general satisfaction. After the race the victors were each presented with a silver goblet as a trophy of victory, and when the large cup is completed their names will be first inscribed on it.

NEW STEAM YACHT.—Steam is no doubt destined to play a prominent part in American pleasure yachts, and the day may not be very far in the future when this motive power will take the place of sails where ease and pleasure only are the ends in view. A new specimen of naval architecture was recently launched from the yard of Wood, Dialogue & Co., in Camden, N. J., in the shape of a steam yacht, in which the owners—Messrs. E. Benson, G. H. North, Theodore Emory and others—intend to combine business with pleasure. The hull of white oak, 97 feet in length, 20 feet beam and 8 feet 6 inches hold, with a draft of 8 feet. The rig is that of a fore-and-aft scooooner. The ground tackle is heavy, with galvanized windlass and extra heavy brass-capped bits. On the main deck, commencing forward, is the engine-room, which is large, well lighted and ventilated. The after cabin, on the main deck, is a beautiful apartment, finished in rosewood, black walnut panelled in blue, with gilt mouldings. The furniture is of black walnut. The dining table will seat twenty persons. The forward and after cabins below have sleeping berths for twenty-five. The hurricane deck affords a fine promenade, and on the forward part is a smoking saloon. The engine is a low-pressure, direct-acting propeller, with a cylinder 28 inches square, with a jet condenser; average pressure of steam, 40lbs. The name of the yacht is "The Major;" she is under the command of Captain D. B. Hallenger, with Mr. Clark, formerly of New York, but now a resident of Philadelphia, as chief engineer. A company of invited guests accompanied the owners in the trial trip on the rivers Delaware and Schuylkill on the 7th inst., when music, wit and wine helped to make the excursion very enjoyable, the vessel giving every satisfaction.

MONUMENT TO RENFORTH.—The monument which has been placed over the grave of the celebrated oarsman, James Renforth, in St. Edmund's Cemetery, Gateshead-on-Tyne, Eng., was unveiled on Oct. 28th, in the presence of a large number of persons. The design comprises a full sized figure of Renforth, reclining in the arms of Harry Kelly (both in rowing costume); medallions of James Percy and Robert Chambers, who, with Renforth and Kelley, formed the English crew, and the following inscription:—"Erected by public subscription to the memory of James Renforth, of Gateshead, Champion Sculler of the World, who died August 23d, 1871, aged 29 years, while rowing in the International Boat Race, between the English and American crews on the Kennebecassis river, near St. John, N. B."

THE TURF.

THE RACING SEASON OF 1872.

The racing season of 1872 having closed, a brief retrospect of the principal events of the past campaign may not be uninteresting to our turf readers. The season opened with the spring meeting of the Metairie Jockey Club, at New Orleans, on March 30th, where Mr. Sanford's grand four year old colt, Monarchist, successfully commenced that racing campaign which wound up so brilliantly at Jerome Park in the fall. At this meeting he won the Club Purse, mile and a half, and the Metairie Cup, two miles and a quarter, with such consummate ease as to establish his vast superiority over the horses opposed to him, although among them were such fivers as Pilgrim, Nannie Douglas, Annie Bush, Foster, Wanderer, Nellie Ransom and Barney Williams. His stable companion, the fleet filly Salina, triumphantly carried off the Fungaman Stakes, for four year olds, but was subsequently beaten by Nannie Douglas in the two mile heat race, and by Conductor, in the two miles and a half dash. Frank Hampton, the unfashionably bred five year old, owned by Bacon and Holland, being by Aysgarth, out of a Charley Ball mare, made his successful debut on the turf by winning the two mile heat purses from large fields of good horses. Annie Bush won the mile and a quarter dash, beating Madame Dudley, Frank Ross, Morlacchi (her own sister) and others, and, although she had to succumb to Frank Hampton at equal weights in a heat, she showed her great staying qualities by winning the four mile heat race from Nannie Douglas, Conductor and Pilgrim, all of whom she distanced in the fast time of 7:39; 7:39½; 8:21. Capt. Moore's grey colt Enquirer, by Lexington from Magnolia, Blythdale, Malita, and six others, in fair time (1:47), and Sancebox and Sweepstakes bore Capt. Cottrill's colors to victory in two races. Blind Tom, the hurdle racer, by his double victory, gained a prestige as a cross-country horse that he subsequently failed to maintain in the northern states. Following close on the Metairie meeting was that of the Louisiana Jockey Club, and which resulted in a brilliant inauguration of this offshoot of the old Metairie Association. Here Monarchist pursued his triumphant career of conquest by winning the Grand Inaugural Post Stake, worth $1,000, and the Louisiana Stake, both two mile heats, in hollow style; Sancebox won two races for Capt. Cottrill, and her stable companions, Magnolia and Frank Ross, one each. Cape Race lowered London's colors in the Pickwick Stakes, mile heats, but his success was attributable to the capital start he got, and he failed to realise the high hopes entertained of him when he came north and met Joe Daniels at Jerome Park and Saratoga. Annie Bush showed her gameness and speed by winning the four mile heat purse from her sister, Morlacchi, and Tom Corbett, in 7:36; 7:51¾, and it is a matter of regret that the reported breaking down of this game little mare may prevent us witnessing her encountering Monarchist in the great four mile heat race at New Orleans next spring. She won for her owners, Messrs. Rice & McCormick, at these two meetings, $6,000, but Mr. Sanford surpassed this with the earnings of his stable, which amounted to nearly $9,600. The Memphis meeting followed next, and was only noticeable for the victory of Euchre over Annie Bush at two mile heats, after the winner had carried off the handicap stakes, and for the double success of Quartermaster in two mile heat races, in fast time. The Lexington, Ky., and Nashville, Tenn., meetings were held in the same week, in the middle of May. At the former Hollywood showed something of her high two-year old form, by beating Sancebox and Express at two mile heats, and Zeb. Ward's filly Planetarium proved herself the best three-year old out by winning the Phœnix Hotel Stakes, mile heats, in 1:45; 1:46¾, and a mile and half sweepstakes in 2:44. Proctor's distinguished career on the mile and quarter, and mile and three-quarter dashes, in 2:09¾ and 3:07 respectively, the fastest time on record at these distances. At Nashville, Annie Bush had her revenge on Euchre by beating her at two mile heats and three miles, and Arizona, Cape Race's four-year old sister, won two races at mile heats and mile and a half.

At Jerome Park Spring Meeting was next, and was signalised by the overwhelming success the Dwyer stable obtained over the McDaniel confederacy, which won the Belmont Stakes with Joe Daniels, the Westchester Cup, and two mile heat race, with Harry Bassett, and two purses with Tubman. The race of the latter with Lyttleton in the mile heat purse was the most sensational of the meeting. Tubman won the first heat, Lyttleton the second, and Tubman the third, a result which might have been different had Tubman's bridle broken in the last heat. Ortolan showed his tremendous speed by carrying the top weight and winning the Fordham Handicap in a canter from such fast horses as Alroy, Mary Louise, Frank Ross and eight others. The speedy mare Eclipse and Capt. Alarm won three races right off the reel, and Midday, another daughter of Eclipse, won two races at different distances. Harry Bassett easily disposed of Lyttleton, first horse of Longfellow, in the Westchester Cup, and distanced Metella in the fine heat of a two-mile heat race. Lochiel showed himself as good on the flat as across country, for he won the Post stake and hurdle race easily, and Springbok won the two year old purse so cleverly from four competitors that Col. McDaniels at once gave Mr. Swigert the money he asked for him, and he is now the main dependence of the confederacy for the great three year old stakes next season.

At Monmouth Park, July meeting, the McDaniels confederacy encountered a series of reverses strikingly in contrast with the brilliant successes which had previously attended it. The first disappointment sustained by the stable and its supporters was in the defeat of Abdel Koree, by Padilacea, in the mile dash, and this was followed by the unlooked for victory of Meteor over Joe Daniels in the Jersey Derby. Misfortunes never come alone, it is said, and so it proved here, for Abdel Koree met with a second defeat by Lyttleton, in the mile heat race, and then the hitherto regarded invincible Harry Bassett went down in the dust before the mighty Longfellow in the Monmouth Cup. This last was the most sensational race of the season, for the meeting of the champions of the eastern and western turf had been for months anticipated with the greatest interest. How the great chestnut son of Lexington and Canary Bird was ignominiously beaten by the Kentucky colt is history now a matter of course, and the sensation caused by his defeat has never been equaled since the southern champion, Sir Henry, went down before the northern representative, Eclipse, half a century before. That the entire stable of McDaniels had seen the subsequent running abandantly proved. In the Monmouth Oaks, Mr. Belmont ran first and second with Woodbine and Victoria, won the July Stakes with Modesty, and the Monmouth Stakes with Wade Ha mpton—no bad share of success for one stable.

The venue now changes to the July meeting at Saratoga, and again does victory crown the confederacy stable, for Joe Daniels revenges his Long Branch defeat and secures the first laurels by beating Meteor in the rich Travers Stakes, worth $5,450; Harry Bassett won the all aged sweepstakes from the flyers, Ortolan, Lyttleton and Victoria, and then crowned the climax of his triumphs by beating his previous conqueror, Longfellow, in decisive style, in the Saratoga Cup, the race being the fastest on record at the distance. In this race Longfellow pulled up lame, and his friends insisted that but for this contretemps he must have won, while others maintain that he showed symptoms of lameness in the race, only after he was suddenly pulled up. In consequence of this, the question of superiority of speed and gameness between the two celebrated horses must always remain a matter of dispute. Tom Bowling won the two year old Flash Stakes in fast time, but perhaps he might not have been hailed the winner if the second horse, Mr. Belmont's Silk Stockings, had not lost a deal of ground at the start, a very material point in a short half mile spin. Kingfisher, after having been pronounced hopelessly broken down for a whole year, came out, under Anthony Yuro's skillful preparation, and won, easily, the mile dash in 1:43¾, within a quarter second of the fastest time on record. That fleet son of Eclipse and imp. Maud, Alarm, won two races, at three quarters and one mile, the fastest time on record, respectively, viz., 1:16 and 1:42¾; and Buckden, his stable companion, in the three year old purse, made a dead heat with Grey Planet, and divided the money. Catsby, another son of Eclipse, won the Saratoga Stakes, Tubman the two mile purse and Consolation Race, Harry Bassett the three mile purse, and Mr. Belmont the Alabama and Sequel Stakes, with Woodbine and Wade Hampton.

Returning to Long Branch at the August meeting, Mr. Sanford commenced auspiciously by winning the mile dash with Preakness and the Iroquois Stakes with Monarchist. Sancebox followed up his Saratoga victory by winning the Thespian and August Stakes, the former in the fastest time on record for a two-year old. Albuera surprised every one by winning two races right off the reel the first time she had ever passed the post in front. Nevada, a full sister to the flying Salina, won the West End Hotel Stakes, and the game mare, Susan Ann, owned by that staunch Kentucky turfman, H. P. McGrath, won two Stakes and the four mile purse, beating such good horses as Lyttleton, Kinefisher (who finished his racing career by breaking down badly), Preakness and Alroy. Meteor won the Robins Stakes from a moderate field, and King Henry, who had thrown away in disgust by Mr. Sanford the night before, came out and won the Consolation purse.

At the Saratoga August Meeting, Joe Daniels conclusively proved his superiority as a three year old, winning the Kenner Stakes, his stable companions—Harry Bassett, Hubbard, Katie Pease and Tubman, each winning a race. Silk Stockings and Count D'Orsay won the Kentucky and sweepstakes for two year olds, Mary Louise two handicap races, and Arizona the Consolation Purse. The other winners were Frank Hampton, Experience Oaks, Ortolan, Elsie and London. Blind Tom and Tamany winning the three jumping races. The Kentucky September meeting at Lexington was signalised by the victory of Fanny M., a daughter of Lightning, in the Phœnix Hotel Stakes, mile heats, in the fast time of 1:44½; 1:44½; the double victory of Aroola at mile and two mile heats, and the winning of Maximus, Lanpi and Crockford, all sons of Lightning, in the two and three year old stakes. Frogtown, one of Bonnie Scotland's best sons, won two races, and King Bernadotte one in two. At Nashville meeting, held the same month, Lanpi won the Battle House Stakes, Fanny M. the Merchants' Exchange Stakes, London (after being beaten by Wanderer in a mile and quarter race), the two mile dash, Euchre the mile heat purse, and Wanderer the two mile heat Railroad Stake and the mile and quarter dash.

At Jerome Park Fall Meeting, Fanchon surprised every one by winning the Manhattan Handicap, beating such fleet horses as Tubman, Monarchist and Ortolan. Joe Daniels won the Jerome and Annual Stakes, Tubman the mile heats, Grand National Handicap, Sue Ryder two dash races, and Harry Bassett one. The fleet Ortolan won twice at a mile and mile and five furlongs, with heavy weights, and Monarchist twice triumphed over Harry Bassett at both three and four miles, showing that the latter had lost his previous high form by constant, unremitting work from April to October, without a moment's let up. The other winners were Frank Hampton, Minnie W., Woodbine, Lord Byron, Sanford and Nickajack. Mr. M. A. Littell showed the high promise of his stable by winning all the three two year old stakes and purses with Wildidle, Wizard and Fellow Craft, and evincing how formidable must be his representatives in the great three year old races of next season.

The Jockey Club meeting terminated the racing season of 1872. The Dixie Stakes, the richest in value of the season, was won by the lucky McDaniels stable with Hubbard, his stable companion, Katie Pease, who could have been first, if requisite, taking the $1,000 second money, and also winning the Consolation Purse. This victory was followed up by the success of Tubman in the Pimlico Stakes, mile heats; the $1,000 Purse, mile heat, and the Bowie Stakes, two mile heats. Monarchist won the three mile dash, but Mr. Sanford declined to start him against Tubman in the four mile heat race, and the stable was represented by Preakness, who was previously disposed of in the second heat. Catsby won the Central Stakes for two year olds, Mary Louise the free handicap, Nevada the three year old sweepstakes, Brennus the selling purse, Merodac the two year old purse, and Arizona the handicap purse, two mile heats. This last race wound up the racing season of 1872, which has been one of unexampled brilliancy.

RACING CHALLENGE TO THE WORLD.—The well-known veteran turfman, Colonel McDaniels, authorizes the following bold challenge to the racing men of both hemispheres, and to make it an object to European turfmen, he places the stakes to be run for sufficiently high to prompt them to cross the Atlantic with their stables.

"CHALLENGE TO THE WORLD."—I will match my stable, three races, against any horse or horses in the world, to name at the post, two, three and four-mile heats, for ten or twenty thousand dollars each race. The races to be run over the Saratoga Course, New York, any time between the last day of July, and the first of September, 1873. McDANIELS, Princeton, N. J.

This is a spirit stirring defi, and if accepted will give additional eclat to the racing campaign of 1873, and increase the brilliancy and attraction of the Saratoga summer season.

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, Nov. 18th, 1872.

The fiery drama in Boston has not been without its effect in this city, and the more timid of our citizens are already discounting a fire in the metropolis that will make Chicago and Boston's conflagrations appear ridiculously small in comparison; but these fears are groundless, for the bitter lesson Boston has been taught will have the effect to put us on our guard, and make us take extra precautions to avert a similar calamity. There seems to be a desire to attribute the cause and extent of the late fire to the Mansard roofs, but had the fire department been on the alert and quick to respond to the first alarm, the flames would not have gone beyond the first Mansard; narrow streets had more to do with the destruction of property than anything else, and when Boston is making changes in the architecture of the new buildings, let her widen the streets in the burnt district. The theatres escaped damage, not being in the location of the fire.....Mr. Daly having tried the vegetable business without profit, will next turn his attention to what he is pleased to term a local picturesque sensation fully entitled "Round the Clock." There will be a large number of hands round the clock, and the piece, on the face of it, will show life in New York as it is, in a very clear and minute manner, and as expense is a secondary consideration with Mr. Daly, we may look for a holiday time piece of rare excellence and interest.....People who imagine that Mr. Barnum isn't benevolent simply because he is not to-day, and there they will see nice little illuminated cards hanging around, on which they may read:—"Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall obtain peace?" "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth," etc., which goes to show man that the showman sinks the shop in his private domains, and studies the beautiful admonitions of holy writ.....The public taste in amusements varies as much as Irish stew, and is just as puzzling to understand. In looking over the interesting correspondence and advertisements in that bustle-ing paper, the NEW YORK CLIPPER, we were forcibly struck with one thing or another, and especially with the odd mixtures with which the dear people throughout the country are regaled. All sorts of notions people have of what is good to eat—some like it raw, as shad or fish; rare Martens for a treat; and "Fox" is still a standing fare, while others serve up "Rice," and traveling round we find that some to feed on "Oates" are not too nice; some are forced to lunch on "Puffs," and some to swallow "Bates," while other some have nothing else but simple "open dates." [This thing may not be easily seen through by the "injudicious few;" to them we rise to explain:—we have endeavored to make large use of certain words that performers now raging through the country, and the names of plays as well. You will notice how comically we wind it up with "open dates." Now, these are not dates to be eaten, you will perceive, but dates or periods in which performers may be engaged to act. We like to make things clear to all of our readers, and if, without the prop of explanation, our meaning is thought should be hidden beneath the sombre hue of a funeral pall, as it were, remember that many a rose is born to waste its fragrance on the desert air.—ED.].....There was a man we had our eyes on lately, who we intended to turn to a profitable account as a unique side show along with our Circassian Girl and pious cow. This man has been locked up in prison on a charge preferred, much to factor twenty-five times; he has been an habitual drunkard ten years, sure; has professed real infidelity a good deal of that time, and was altogether one of the wickedest creatures you ever laid your eyes on; this was the man we had angled out for a glorious purpose, but we had made no bargain; was money in him; we saw that he would knock all other side shows higher than an uninterrupted balloon; we had quietly made out pictures of him slaying the pure and unsullied wife of his bosom; in two colors we had done him up as the guilty fiend who had set Boston on fire; in a series of expensive canvas back paintings we had him deftly pictured in the act of murdering Mr. Nathan, showing how he escaped the wide-awake detectives, how he slew his chum after sharing with him, how he lived in a mammoth cave with nothing for his companion but a crust of bread, and how he scuttled the ship on which he was going to Australia, leaving the other in passage to perish in their tracks, while he surreptitiously walked ashore in the gloom and silence of the night; we had written cheerful verses about his ferociousness for the magazines and religious papers to point a moral and adorn a tale; we had expended more real money to bill this inhuman monster than was ever conceived of in the experience of the oldest showman; we had made passing rhymes about him to be folded up in secret papers and bon bons; engaged the whole of that big fence around the new post office to exhibit gorgeous pictures of him as he appeared when he cleaned out twelve bar-rooms in one night because the virtuous proprietors, to their horror be it said, refused to let him have any more liquor—without the money. All this trouble and expense, mind you, we were about being in the cause of public morals and our family side show. Then we got a man with a few hundred dollars to act as treasurer; and another party by the name of Johnston with a t and a few more hundred dollars, to be a go ahead man and lay out a route and people who said anything against the coming man; and we secured a capable person to "arrange" with the press to give glowing accounts of his brutal instincts and touching fondness in the death and burial of his victims. All this had we done without another soul knowing anything about it except those two people with a few hundred dollars. And then we went to engage the man, to secure the show, you will understand, before those insatiate circus men should hear about him and pick him up for one of their concert freebies. He was nowhere to find, though; we thought we might catch him at the Cooper Institute picking pockets, or lecturing on "Men's Rights;" but he was not. Then we laid for him in Greenwood Cemetery, for among his other accomplishments was that of body snatching, both living and deceased; but we got hold of the wrong men instead of resurrecting a cold one, and they let us go after robbing us of a dollar and a quarter we owed for last week's lodgings; then we visited each of the Museums, but the schools were minus of him; after going through all the street passenger cars and stages, and ferry boats, and schooners and things that sail the wide ocean, and going on canal boats to all parts of the state, without coming across the show, we bethought us of the Tombs, and there we found him; but it is with a mournful pen we are obliged to state that a committee of some new Christian Association had been there before us, had just left, in fact, and that they had secured him to act as a reformed minister of the gospel. Thus was the labor of weeks rendered null and void—thus did the few hundred dollars of those two confiding men take wings and fly away, and thus is one moral family side show bereft of one of its most attractive features.....When the manager of the Grand Opera House let out a reef or two in the skirts of his dancing girls and fairies, he did them a grievous wrong, which he soon observed, when his patrons looked so sorrowfully on the poor girls, and showed by their dejected countenances that they had been unfairly treated. But with a desire to conform to the wants of the community, the manager took in double reefs in the lower stuff, took down the string in from the t'gallant breastworks, and gave to the beautiful little cherubs their wonted buoyant appearance and free and easy bearing. [Ever since we sailed on the canals in search of that mad we have been unable to divest our thoughts of seafaring language, and where'er we be, whate'er we do, sailor phrases come unbidden to our lips, and we are thereby placed in a false position. The other night a man collided with us at the port hole of the old Bowery, for which we inadvertently "d—d his tarry top lights." In a moment he had shivered our timbers, knocked us on our beam ends, and got the ticket that our money had paid for. At breakfast yesterday, we called out to a pretty waiter boy, right before all the best grade of first-class hotel guests, "Avast there, you lubber; bring us some salt junk, and be d—d quick about it; d'ye hear?" Just in that way; and the guests looked at us and scowled, and every one of 'em got up and left the table. But starboard, there, where are we drifting?—ED.] We sat up all last night composing the following lines about

THE STAGE FAIRY.

She floats in a realm of vapor,
In appearance quite different from this,
And nightly, with many a caper,
Ascends to the realms of bliss;
Of rose-tinted clouds is her bed made,
On draughts of ambrosia she feeds,
And although she may may not have a red made,
She has fortune and fame at her beck.
One touch of the wand that she carries
Conveys her to regions afar,
And if ever perchance she marries
'Twill be when she's turned into a star;
She glides on the wings of a moonbeam
Within a poor artisan's lair,
Shakes her light star-tipped sceptre above him,
And makes him a millionaire;
But alas! our bright fairy is human,
And lives up a four pair back,
In fact a poor weakly young woman,
Who rides in her heaven in a hack;
Who nurses a bed-ridden mother,
And does all the cooking for two,
And also the washing and ironing,
When there's washing and ironing to do,
And ambrosia for her means pig's trotters,
With ingems, a half pint of beer,
And a round for that old served she totters,
Like an angel she doesn't appear.
While all that rose-tinted complexion,
Which of evenings we so much admire,
Is laid on by her dresser's direction,
Till fairly she seems on fire.
Yet she's a good girl, and her betters
A lesson from her might learn,
Though her garlands hide poverty's fetters,
And what she'd enjoy she must earn.

.....In drifting amid "the elite and fashion of society," vide theatrical programmes, we discovered that the latest of late novelties is to be found in gentlemen's shirts, which now have a few bars of music on the bosom, in some cases accompanied with words. We like this idea wondrous well. Imagine yourself at an evening party; behold Sallie Jones scooting 'round among the fellers, picking out "Old Dog Tray," planting him before her while she jerks lively strains out of that piano; then going for "Champagne Charley," and wrestling with the keys while he is being done; then dragging forth "Lucy Lovel and Lady Nancy Bell"—out of whose bosoms, respectively, there grew a red rose and green briar—and slashing away until "Lord Lovel" gets see sick; then marching 'round the "Soldier of Jerusalem," snaking him out, and jibing him up against the wall until she had torn his manly bosom all to tatters; then, without ever stopping to take breath, going for the "Down in a Coal Mine"-er, and getting an eye full of him and playing full, and slashing him around till she got another eye full, and standing him on his head, and turning him over, and making things lively, and finishing up with "You'll Remember Me." There's no end to the fun in a party of this kind, and we hope this new fashion will be generally adopted, though it should destroy all of the old style music publishers. Sewing machines will find plenty of work in making shirts, and repairing the many so rudely mangled; and some false-Hood would get up a new song of a new shirt; and all the fresh musical compositions would be slung out on clothes lines to dry, and children could be taught "music without a master," and music stands would be done away with, each member of the orchestra serving as a stand for the other, and the leader could turn over a chap when he wanted another player to hold up, and in this way the whole orchestra could appear in clean shirts every night. The man who invented this thing ought to have a monument erected over him.....[At this juncture, "Our Jim" entered, to hold a "mass meeting" with us, as he called it, on the never-ending subject of holidays; he wants to know whether we intend to have thanks given in this office, and whether the corpse will have to find their own refreshments; he is also desirous of ascertaining whether we need any one to report the great fire in Boston, as he has a friend there he hasn't seen in two years. A conniving, idle youth is "OUR JIM."—ED.]

City Summary.

THE LEOPAR BROTHERS, acrobats and hat spinners; Thomas and Heeny, double jig dancers, and Signor Faranta, contortionist, were the fresh appearances at White's Athenæum during the past week. The Leopar brothers are good performers, being agile and skilful, whilst their acrobatic feats were graceful, and their hat spinning excellent. Thomas and Heeny, who appeared in white faces, evoked the approbation of the audiences by their meritorious dancing. Signor Faranta displayed remarkable suppleness of limb, while his postures were graceful, and his various feats evinced laborious practice. Johnny Williams continued during the week, and, for his excellent singing and dancing, received nightly several encores, Rosa Lee, vocalist, closed with the week. Charley White's benefit, on Thursday evening, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, was well attended. For the present week, Charles A. Gardner, Dutch comedian; George F. Moore and Kitty Henderson are announced.

KELLY AND LEON closed their engagement with Bryant's Minstrels with the performances of Saturday evening, Nov. 16th, having appeared during the week in Offenbach's operetta, entitled "The Rose of St. Flour," and Leon giving his Octoroon impersonations, which have met with much favor during their engagement. The changes since our last report were as follows:—In the first part, William Dwyer sang a new song, entitled "Roses Underneath the Snow," which was well received; Charles Sweetwood sang a new song, entitled "Speak to Me," meeting with a like result. Harry Norman's voice was heard to good advantage in "The Flowers are Blooming." In the olio the sketch of "The Wig Makers" was revived. Dan Bryant and Nelse Seymour, by their comicalities, contributed largely to the hilarity of the evening.

A REPETITION OF THE OLD COMEDIES formed the staple of attraction at the Fifth Avenue Theatre during the week just closed, attracting a good attendance. On Monday, "The Inconstant;" Tuesday evening and Saturday matinee, "The Road to Ruin;" Wednesday and Friday evenings, "The Belle's Stratagem;" and Thursday and Saturday evenings, "Everybody's Friend," were performed. "Everybody's Friend" will be acted on Monday, Nov. 18th, for the last time, and on Tuesday evening, 19th, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" is to be produced, and Charles Fisher will act Sir John Falstaff for the first time in this city.

A COURSE OF LECTURES will be given at Steinway Hall, commencing Nov. 18th and continuing on consecutive Monday evenings, under the auspices of the Mercantile Library Association, and it is thought that a substantial addition will be made thereby to the book purchasing fund of that association. The lectures will commence at eight and be preceded by a concert, commencing at 7.30 o'clock. The following lecturers will speak in the order named:—George MacDonald, Edmund Yates, Miss Lillian Edgarton, Wendell Phillips, Bret Harte, Prof. J. H. Pepper, Henry Ward Beecher, Mrs. Scott-Siddons, Col. John Hay, and John B. Gough.

MISS ANNIE ADAMS, serio-comic vocalist, was the only fresh appearance at the Theatre Comique since our last report. She sang in a vigorous and vivacious manner a number of fresh songs, which were lavishly applauded, and she was several times re-called. G. W. Jester continued his excellent dancing performances, and Jennie Hughes sang a fresh selection of songs, but was inappropriately costumed. Clad in a dress of blue silk, profusely trimmed with lace, and wearing upon the summit of her head a small gilt coronet, tipped with large pearls, she sang of a female vegetable vender going to the races in a donkey cart, and afterwards a characteristic song of a waitress in her own restaurant. A song and dance by Master Willie, serio-comic songs by Miss Ada Wray, jig dancing by Miss Kitty O'Neil, Johnny Queen in a "knee" dance, which was vociferously applauded, and the burlesque entitled "Aladdin No. One," with the Misses Sophie and Irene Worrell in prominent roles, filled out the programme. The attendance has continued large. At the conclusion of the performances Mr. Hart causes his orchestra to play lively music until the audiences have left the theatre, which has a pleasing effect. This evening, Nov. 18th, John F. Poole's new burlesque, entitled "The King of Carrots," is to be produced, and therein will appear a troupe of comic French dancers, six in number, under the management of Mr. Francois Morton. James H. McKee will also make his first appearance at this theatre in character songs and dances, likewise Hughey Hagerty, Dutch comedian.

LEW SIMMONS, of Simmons and Slocum's Minstrels, of Philadelphia, Pa., was in the city during the past week for recreation. Frank Kerns, of the Theatre Comique, having obtained a congé for a week, to recuperate his health, joined Lew in a little tour around town.

AN EXCELLENT BUSINESS has been done at Tony Pastor's since our last report. Annie Hindle and Peter Cannon being the fresh appearances. Miss Hindle's character songs met with favor. Peter Cannon sang Irish patter songs, which aroused the audience to a high state of excitement. He is one of the best vocalists of that class that has ever appeared in this city. His dialect is excellent, and his make-up grotesque. Harrigan and Hart appeared to much advantage in their original act, entitled "The Day We Went West," and, later in the evening, in "Mulcahy's Trials." Tony Pastor sang some fresh songs, which were much applauded. Gus Williams' Dutch character songs, as usual, created much hilarity, but he eclipsed all his previous efforts in the character of Peter Dinglespiel, in a new Dutch farce, written expressly for him, entitled "Dinglespiel's Troubles," which kept the audience in almost one continuous shout of laughter while he was on the stage. A song and dance by Tom Granger, "Footsteps in the Sand" by Malinda Nagle, songs by the Misses Jennie Engel and Celia Herd, and one or two sketches filled out the entertainments. The ladies' invitation nights—Friday of each week—when one lady, accompanied by a gentleman, is admitted free of charge, have proved highly successful. On last Friday evening we dropped in for a moment, about ten minutes past eight o'clock, and found the auditorium crowded in every part, while many persons were standing on chairs, tables, etc., in the vestibule. Ladies, accompanied by gentlemen, were flocking into the gallery for seats, rather than go away, and, as we came out, the vestibule, from the box office to the entrance, was well filled with people seeking admission.

CARL RUDOLPH joined Emerson's California Minstrels since our last report, and during the first part has sung "Sadie Ray," meeting with much favor, that being the only change made in that part. Sheridan and Mack closed on Nov. 9th. Delehanty and Hengler have continued, and performed in excellent style their original song and dance called "Little Bunch of Roses." The other changes in the olio consisted of the duet, "Lost, Proscribed," from "Martha," charmingly sung by J. A. Palmer and Carl Rudolph, and Gussie Harwood, the Nine Alpines, to a realization of an idea from "Linda di Chamounix." A fair business has been done. The season, which had not been peculiarly successful, closed suddenly after the performances of Nov. 16th. Mr. Thos. Maguire and Billy Emerson are to return to San Francisco, Cal., immediately.

P. T. BARNUM'S MUSEUM, Menagerie, Caravan, Polytechnic Institute, Hippodrome and International Zoological Garden, at the Hippodrome, in Fourteenth street, is announced to be positively thrown open to the public this evening, Nov. 18th, at seven o'clock P. M., and daily thereafter from eleven A. M., until ten o'clock P. M.

E. A. SOTHERN made his first appearance in this city during the present season on Nov. 11th, commencing an engagement at Wallack's Theatre, and acting on that evening and during the week in "Our American Cousin," which was cast as follows:—

Lord Dundreary	Mr. Sothern
Asa Trenchard	J. B. Polk
Sir Edward Trenchard	Mr. Leonard
Lieut. Vernon	E. M. Holland
Florence Trenchard	Mrs. Fanny Foster
Mary Meridith	Rose Coghlan
Augusta	Miss Blaisdell
The comedy was tastefully mounted, two new scenes having been painted therefor, giving two views of the dairy farm, which were gems of scenic art. Mr. Sothern's performance of Lord Dundreary, a character written and created by himself, probably approaches as near perfection as is allotted to mortal power. Every word that is uttered, every gesture, every movement, every facial expression is the result of close and assiduous study mellowed by long practice, and so carefully concealed is the art by which these effects are accomplished that the entire portraiture appears but simple nature—but that is the highest stage of histrionic art. Further panegyric upon a performance which has challenged the admiration of the critical in two hemispheres would at the present time be futile. J. B. Polk had a peculiar conception of Asa Trenchard, which was not without merit, and he deserves commendation for his embodiment of it. Though somewhat crude at present, future practice will improve and mellow it. W. J. Leonard was acceptable as Sir Edward Trenchard, being quiet, dignified and gentlemanly. E. M. Holland as Lieutenant Vernon, and J. Peck as Captain de Boots, evinced care and attention. J. W. Carroll, who made his first appearance at this theatre, acted Richard Coyle with discrimination and effect. He has evidently enjoyed practice in a good school, has repose and was well made up. J. H. Stoddart found in Abel Murcott a character in consonance with his artistic sympathies, and his portrayal thereof was truthful and natural. G. F. Browne was moderately successful in his portrayal of Binney, but to those who remember the late A. Charles Peters in that role comment is unnecessary. Rose Coghlan deserves much credit for his acting of Buddicombe. Mrs. Fanny Foster's conception and embodiment of Florence Trenchard was creditable and lady-like, particularly when her limited professional experience is taken into consideration. She possesses undoubted histrionic ability, which needs only practice to fully ripen. That she is a close student is evident. Miss Rose Coghlan created more than a favorable impression by her charming, ingenuous impersonation of Mary Meredith. To American ears the slight English intonation in her speech, combined with the too frequent use of the rising inflection, might be considered a drawback, but we think that time will remedy that. M'me Ponisi acted Mrs. Mountchessington in a natural and artistic manner. Miss Blaisdell deserves credit for the attention bestowed on Augusta. Miss Katherine Rogers' impersonation of Georgina was excellent, the lack-a-daisical manner, when in the presence of Lord Dundreary, being well simulated. She is quite pretty and her movements are lady-like and graceful. Miss McCormick deserves a word of praise for her acting of the brief character of Sharp. The attendance has been large, eligible standing room being nightly in demand.

THE LYDIA THOMPSON BURLESQUE TROUPE, whose power of attraction seems to be perennial, commenced an engagement at the Olympic Theatre on Monday evening, Nov. 11th. During the past four years this company has fulfilled six engagements in this city, embracing a period of eighty-seven weeks and six hundred and forty-nine performances, and notwithstanding they closed, on Sept. 28th, an engagement at Wallack's Theatre which had extended over a period of ten weeks, they were greeted upon their first appearance at the Olympic by a large and enthusiastic audience, and during the entire week the seating capacity of the auditorium was fully tested. The vehicle for their rentree was a burlesque extravaganza never hitherto performed by them in this city, in two acts, entitled "Aladdin the Second," which was acted with the following cast:—

Aladdin II	Lydia Thompson
The Sultan	John Bryer
The Vizier	Harry Beckett
Pekoe	Camille Dubois
Abanazar	Willie Edouin
Te-to-tum	Fannie Leslie
Slave of the Lamp	Jennie Wheatleigh
The Genius of the Ring,	Jennie Wheatleigh
The Widow Twankey,	Harry Beckett
Princess Badroulboudour,	Eliza Weathersby

Every scene had been freshly painted and many were of surpassing beauty, bearing unmistakable traces of the skill of the artist, Mr. Hayes. The characters were clad in new and tasteful costumes, and the properties and appointments were magnificent. During the course of the burlesque a corps de ballet, numbering some forty ladies, with average height, shapely forms, disported themselves in two ballet divertissements under the glare of numerous calcium lights, shown through colored mediums, which constantly changing in hue produced a beautiful kaleidoscopic effect. The music with which the dialogue was plentifully interlarded was composed of popular selections and was correctly performed. The duet of the gendarmes, from "Genevieve de Brabant," was given in almost inimitable style by Miss Lydia Thompson and Harry Beckett, and had such a telling effect upon the audience that it was nightly re-demanded some five or six times, and cheerfully accorded. Miss Weathersby's singing of "Cackle, Cackle" was likewise received with much favor. Miss Lydia Thompson invested the character of Aladdin the Second with much ease and delicious abandon. She seems to possess a natural well-spring of vivacity which never fails to honor the requisitions made upon it. As usual her dancing evoked a large meed of applause. John Bryer invested the Sultan with comical dignity and was correct and painstaking. The pretty face and figure of the brunette, Miss Carlotta Zurbini, lent a charm to the character of the Vizier, while the golden haired blonde, Miss Camille Dubois', vivacious impersonation of Pekoe, was placed in admirable juxtaposition. Willie Edouin found an opportunity to display much grotesque humor in the character of the magician, Abanazar, as also to perform some clever feats in legerdemain. Miss Fanny Leslie, as Te-to-tum, in a dance displayed much grace and suppleness of limb, while the rapidity of her movements astonished the audience and drew forth a torrent of applause. Miss Tilly Earle, as the "slave of the lamp," and Miss Jennie Wheatleigh, as the "genius of the ring," respectively deserve credit for the attention bestowed upon what little was required of them, and it may be added that they both presented a charming appearance. Harry Beckett, as the Widow Twankey, brimmed o'er with grotesque humor, which became infectious with the audience. Miss Elise Holland, as the Princess Badroulboudour, was seen to great advantage. Clad in a costume closely approximating that natural to her sex, she presented a charming appearance, while her acting was easy and natural. Her vocal efforts deserve more than a passing notice, and the air of modesty with which the entire impersonation was surrounded lent it an indescribable charm. A pronounced success has been achieved, and it would appear that "Aladdin the Second" may continue a prosperous reign until the termination of the present engagement, which is to last one month. The regular dramatic prices of admission have been resumed, as well as the Wednesday matinees.

J. M. WARD commenced an engagement at Wood's Museum on Monday evening, Nov. 11th, and acted during the week at the evening performances, as well as the Saturday matinee, in F. G. Maeder's drama, entitled "Buffalo Bill," which we reviewed at length upon the occasion of its original production in this city. Mr. Ward grasped the salient features of the character of Buffalo Bill and gave a vigorous impersonation thereof. The support by the stock company, considered as a whole, was worthy of commendation, and their combined efforts have attracted an excellent attendance. At the usual matinee performances "The Silver Demon" was acted. This evening, Nov. 18th, Johnny Thompson, a great favorite with the patrons of that theatre, commences his first engagement during the present season, acting in "Our Colored Brother."

MR. AND MRS. DION BOUCICAULT, Shiel Barry, C. Alexander and Miss Geraldine Stuart closed their engagements at Booth's Theatre with the performance of Saturday evening, Nov. 16th, having acted during the week on Monday, Tuesday, Friday and Saturday evenings, also the Saturday matinee, in "Kerry;" or, Night and Morning," and "Grimaldi Grown," and on Wednesday and Thursday evenings in "Arrah-na-Pogue." This evening, Nov. 18th, Miss Neilson is to make her American debut, acting Juliet in "Romeo and Juliet." Mr. J. Wheelock will act Romeo, and J. W. Wallack, Mercutio.

THE LAST WEEK OF "LA Roi Carotte" at the Grand Opera House will be the present. Mr. Stuart Robson and thirty-five in the company during the past week. Active preparations are now being made for the production, probably on Nov. 25th, of a local sensational drama entitled "Round the Clock," in which will be presented many realistic pictures of New York life among the lower classes by gaslight.

SPENCER PRITCHARD AND HARRY AMLAR made their debut on the dramatic stage at the Bowery Theatre on Monday, 11th, in a new sensational drama in four acts, written by Spencer Pritchard, entitled "Counterfeit; or, True and False," which was then performed for the first time. Harry Amlar had hitherto had considerable experience upon the minstrel stage, but Mr. Pritchard had never before appeared in public. The drama is above the average of its class, the incidents being well grouped, the story intelligently told and the language good. In its present condition it is too verbose; a fault, however, which can be easily remedied. The main points of its plot are:—

An old counterfeiter, Richard Thorn, initiates in criminal practices a young man, Philip Gray, in his employ as a clerk, and then the bloom of youth. Gray professes love for Laura, the daughter of Richard Thorn, and when he asks the latter for her hand in marriage is told that when he can prove that he is an honest man his suit may be regarded favorably. Gray disappears, and after an absence of three years, claimed to have been passed in England, where he inherited a fortune from a deceased aunt, he returns to Thorn's residence, and making known to him the above story, demands the hand of Laura in marriage. The daughter has won, during Gray's absence, the pure affection of Fred. Walters, an honorable and respected citizen, though not blessed with a large amount of wealth, and to him in return has she given her maiden love. Richard Thorn believing that Gray is enormously wealthy, and that in case of his former nefarious practices coming to light he can materially aid him, gives his consent to the marriage, and promises to use his paternal authority to consummate it. What Gray has stated is shown to be false, and we find him at the head of a gang of counterfeiters manufacturing treasury notes in a cottage in the woods near Thorn's residence. The tracking of Gray through varied scenes, fixing his crime upon him, and arresting him at the moment the marriage is about to take place by George Hilton, a United States detective, and a warm friend of Fred. Walters, aided by the negro, Peter G. Washington Green, and the marriage of Fred. Walters and Laura Thorn, fill out the drama.

Spencer Pritchard, who impersonated George Hilton, has a good figure, an expressive face, and a good voice not yet thoroughly under control. Considering his lack of experience, his efforts deserve high praise. He was, apparently, free from nervousness, and had considerable ease and repose. That he possesses considerable latent histrionic ability is patent, which practice and study will properly develop. Harry Amlar, as Peter G. Washington Green, a negro, acted with much fidelity to nature, and created no little amusement. W. L. Street, as the gentlemanly ruffian, Philip Gray, displayed much care and attention. T. J. Martin made quite a character of Jim Burton. Harry Holmes, as the virtuous lover, was quite satisfactory. Miss Polly Booth did not act Laura Thorn on Friday evening, when we were present, and Miss E. Wheeler assumed that character at short notice, and deserves praise for her efforts. The balance of the cast was well performed. The drama was preceded during the week by "Catching an Heiress," and on Friday and Saturday evenings, between the two pieces, the Gorman brothers danced a double essence, which met with favor. This evening, Nov. 18th, J. Holmes ed at the matinee on the 16th inst. Mr. Davenport will appear this week in "Virginius," in which Miss L. Vining Davenport will, for the first time, sustain the character of Virginia, and on the 23d inst., for his benefit in "The Wonder; or, Woman Keeps a Secret" and "Therese, the Orphan of Geneva."

AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE, Memphis, Tenn., F. S. Chanfrau commenced an engagement of two weeks on Nov. 11th, opening in "Sam." Our correspondent, writing on Nov. 14th, says:—"He is supported by the entire company from De Bar's Opera House, St. Louis, Mo. Commencing the 18th, 'Kit, the Arkansas Traveler,' will occupy the boards all the week. Business has, thus far, been very good, notwithstanding the counter attractions, such as the exposition, 'Shin Fane' at the theatre, Dan Rice's Circus at Hopefield, across the river, the two varieties theatres and numerous other minor attractions. Mrs. James A. Oates' Comic Opera Company will succeed Chanfrau at the opera house. Among the members of the company those worthy of special mention are Mrs. Laura Linden, Miss Sallie Partington, Mrs. Edstrom, H. A. Ellis, Will J. Wiggins, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Mitchell, Wm. Harris and Chas. Krouse, who render Mr. Chanfrau fine support. The Laura Roslyn of Mrs. Linden was particularly fine, and the Lady Cropley of Miss Kitty Mills and Marian of Miss Tilly McHenry were very good.....At the Memphis Theatre T. G. Riggs commenced an engagement on the 11th, supported by the Olympic stock company of St. Louis. Mr. Riggs, although a stranger to our theatre-goers, drew very well, and delighted everybody who witnessed his acting in 'Shin Fane,' 'Arrah-na-Pogue' and 'The Colleen Bawn.' He is a fine comedian, with a good brogue, and has already become quite a popular here. Miss Eliza O'Connor, a lady of fine personal appearance, has made a great many admirers by her admirable impersonations of Ellen Curran, Arrah Meelish and the Colleen Bawn. Miss Katie Mayhew made a hit in the character of Mollie Sullivan in 'Shin Fane,' not only acting the part well but rendering the sweet Irish melodies incidental to the piece with fine effect. Her popularity is rapidly increasing. Miss Marie Bernard, a lady of fine stage presence, very graceful in her movements and correct in her reading, gave a good representation of the characters of Widow Sweeney and Fanny Powers, except that in the latter character she did not manifest sufficient care and study. Mr. Fred. Bock gave some fine touches of natural acting in his representation of the O'Grady. Mr. W. J. Hurley made a hit as Michael Feeny, a character he personated to the life. Chas. Plunkett, as Olney Farrell, was very good, especially in the jig with Katie Mayhew. The other characters were all likewise well rendered. On the 18th Marietta Ravel commences an engagement, opening in 'The French Spy,' supported by the New Orleans company."

JOSEPH PROCTOR, after an absence of seven years, commenced an engagement at the National Theatre, Washington, D. C., on Nov. 11th, acting in the "Red Pocket Book" until Thursday, when, on that and Friday evening, "Nick of the Woods" was acted, and on Saturday "Outlanchet" and "O'Neil, the Rebel," were performed. W. Horace Lingard is billed on Nov. 18th, for one week, and Furbish and Wilton's dramatic company on the 25th, for two weeks.

"SARATOGA" was produced at the Brooklyn Theatre, N. Y., for the first time this season on Nov. 11th, with a cast embracing nearly the full strength of the stock company. Bob Sackett, F. Roche; Jack Benedict, M. A. Kennedy; Papa Vanderpool, F. Chippendale; Hon. Wm. Carter, A. H. Hastings; per Remington, E. F. Taylor; Sir Mortimer Muttonidge, J. A. McDowell; Mr. Cornelius Wethertree, George C. Jordan, Jr.; Major Luddington Whist, J. J. Loudon; Frederick Augustus Carter, J. B. Reibert; Frank Littlefield, George Craig; Gyp, J. W. Brutone; Lucy Carter, Mrs. F. B. Conway; Effie Remington, Minnie Conway; Mrs. Vanderpool, Mrs. Farren; Virginia Vanderpool, Fanny Reeves; Olivia Alston, Kate Devereaux; Mrs. Gaylover, Miss A. Merry; Muffins, J. W. Brutone. The drama was handsomely placed upon the stage the set scenes being very attractive stage pictures. Roche is at home as Bob Sacket, the part just suiting his peculiar style, while Chippendale, as Papa, is in his element, his acting being a feature of the performances. Miss Conway as Miss Effie was fine in the part assigned her, and in her rendering of Mr. Peterschen's song, makes quite a hit. The drama keeps the stage this week, after which Charley Gayler's new play, "Son of a Night," is to be performed.

WM. A. BOWRON, juveniles and versatile actor, can be addressed as per advertisement.

AT THE BROOKLYN, L. I., OLYMPIC, Donnelly's new piece, entitled "Fastest Boy in New York," has proved a taking card the past week. The Female Minstrels make their entree this week, and will join "The Fastest Boy" in drawing full houses.

AT THE PARK THEATRE, Brooklyn, L. I., Mlle. Zoe was the reigning star during the week ending Nov. 16th. She appeared in "The Angel of Midnight," "Esmeralda," "The Flying Dutchman," "Dumb Girl of Genoa" and "French Spy" to good business. Miss Annie Firmin and John H. Jack appear this week in "A Wife of Two."

THE ATTENDANCE AT THE CAPITOL THEATRE, Albany, N. Y., during the week, has been very fair, wrote our correspondent on Nov. 16th, adding that:—"The attraction was C. R. Bishop, who opened on the 11th in 'War Clouds,' which drama constituted the attraction the entire week. Mr. Bishop, in the role of Marion D'Manifold, a newspaper correspondent, had ample opportunity to display his fine talents. Indeed, he is one of the most natural comedians on the stage and in anything he undertakes is almost sure to please. J. E. Nugent as General Penton gave a very natural and pleasing impersonation; Mr. Waverly, as Gen. Dolon; Mr. Packer, as Colonel Penton; Mr. Mortimer, as Sir Oscar Durand, and Miss Hannah Bailey, as Stella Penton, were also very good. The balance of the characters did not amount to much, but were well rendered by the persons intrusted with them. The next attraction will be Manager Keeble as Hamlet.....The Trimble Opera House will open Nov. 20th, with the Aimee Opera Bouffe Company as the attraction. This theatre is undergoing great alterations and improvements preparatory to the opening of the season."

CHARLES W. PICKTHORN, a member of the dramatic profession and publicly known as Charles W. Felton, died at the Parker House, Toronto, Ont., on Nov. 8th, of hemorrhage of the lungs. He had formerly acted at the Royal Lyceum, Toronto, Ont., and was a son of the late Capt. W. H. Pickthorn, of the 78th Highlanders, and a grandson of the late Col. Charles Wright, of the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, Eng. The Portsmouth, Eng., newspapers are requested to copy.

AT THE HOLLIDAY STREET THEATRE, Baltimore, Md., John Collins commences an engagement on Nov. 18th.....The city car conductors and drivers, who are suffering from the consequences of the epizootic, had a benefit tendered them by Mr. Ford, at the Grand Opera House, on Nov. 15th. The company at this establishment, a portion of the Front Street Theatre company and Miss Fernanda Tedesco, the accomplished violin virtuoso, volunteered for the occasion. The attendance was very large.

THE JACKSON, MICH., THEATRE was opened on Nov. 13th, under the management of Capt. Stevenson, Frank E. Aiken, supported by his Chicago, Ill., company, acting in "The Ticket-of-Leave Man," which was repeated on the 14th. On the 15th the regular stock company acted in "Fron Fron;" cast as follows:—Fron-Fron, Miss Gracie Greenwood; Sartorys, J. D. Wood; Baron, J. M. Murray; Valrese, F. W. Campbell; Brigard, C. P. Lewis; Zaneth, E. Forrest; Baroness, Miss Florence May; Louise, Miss Edith Branth; Pauline, Miss Minnie Herman; Governess, Mrs. M. O. Stevenson, and Georgia, little Allie Keeler. The company goes to Ann Arbor for three nights, commencing the 20th; Miss Susan Denin, and Harry Linden in dialect attraction, re-opening at Jackson on the 23d, with Miss Denin, Harry Linden is to play a two weeks' engagement, commencing Dec. 2d.

MISS ANNIE WOOD is the lady who is playing Stalacta with Bidwell and Macdonough's "Black Crook" Combination, and not Miss Annie Ward, as a typographical error made it appear in a past issue.

AT THE PROVIDENCE, R. I., OPERA HOUSE "Article 47" was withdrawn after the 13th. "East Lynne" was played on the 14th, 15th, and at the matinee on the 16th, and "Captain Kyd" on the evening of the 15th. Our correspondent, writing on Nov. 16th, says:—"The Saturday night audience was very large. 'Captain Kyd' will be repeated on the 18th and 19th, and the 'Ocean Child' and 'Golden Farmer' will be played on the 20th and 21st. A matinee performance is announced for the 21st, in aid of the sufferers by the Boston fire. Edwin Booth's engagement of five nights commences on the 22d. During the engagement, Miss Ettie Henderson, supported by a portion of Manager Henderson's company, will play 'The Street Singer' at Phœnix, R. I., on the 22d; Westerly, 25th; Wakefield, 26th, and East Attleboro, Mass., 27th. The rest of the company will play 'The Factory Girl' and 'Toodles' at East Attleboro on the 23d; 'Ours,' at Pawtucket, R. I., on the 23d; Newport, 25th; North Attleboro, 26th, and New Bedford, 27th. 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' will be presented at the Opera House matinee on the 23d, in which Ettie Henderson will assume Topsy for the first time in this city. Miss Isadora Cameron, leading lady, closed her engagement on the 16th, and retires temporarily from the stage to add to our population.....At Harrington's Opera House Miss Leo Hudson and the Hudson Family are the attraction for the week, the attendance has been comparatively light during the week. 'Rookwood,' 'Eagle Eye,' 'French Spy on Horseback' and 'Mazeppa' have been the attractions. Morris Simmonds announces Little Nell in 'Fidelia' on the 18th, and Ada Harland as 'Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl,' on the 21st."

LITTLE NELL, who recently closed a successful engagement at Rochester, N. Y., was thus spoken of by the Union and Advertiser, of Nov. 5th:—

Last evening was the occasion of the first appearance this season of Little Nell, "the California Diamond," that prodigy of musical, terpsichorean and dramatic genius, who can draw a larger house here, as well as elsewhere, than many actors who were veterans on the stage before she was born. Her excessive popularity was evinced, not merely in the crowded state of the house, which was struggling enough for the evening's election, more closely packed than on any previous night this season, but also in the rapturous applause with which all the striking scenes, the effective tableaux and the numerous specialties of the young actress were received. The play was the "Waif of Five Waif," a sensational piece, though one in which the incidents, exciting as they are, are drawn from every-day life, without any improbable or semi-miraculous events to cause amazement at the expense of common sense.

ROSE AND HARRY WATKINS and their comedy company commenced an engagement at the Academy of Music, Charleston, S. C., Nov. 11th. Our correspondent, writing on Nov. 14th, says:—

"On Tuesday a new drama by Harry Watkins, entitled 'His Worst Enemy,' was produced. The play, as may be inferred from its name, is a temperance drama somewhat resembling 'Ten Nights in a Bar-room' and 'Fifteen Minutes.' The author, Watkins, is an ambitious young lawyer who forsakes an honorable profession to enter that of politics, where he meets a political trickster, Burd Hawke (Mr. M. J. Jordon,) who seeks his ruin. He contracts habits of dissipation, is degraded and wretched, and end is only saved from a drunkard's grave by the devotion of his wife and child and the true friendship of one Jesse Truehart (Mr. Reed). The play, including tableaux, is in eight acts. Business is perfect, the dialogue is well written, and is destined to become a success. The ghost scene was an excellent illusion. Business is very good, as they are favorites in this city."

FROM SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., we have dramatic advices from our correspondent up to the 9th inst., who reports that:—

"Saratoga" attracted large audiences in its second week at California. It now moves smoothly in every scene. J. C. Williamson makes a handsome appearance, and with a free hand touches of the volatile nature of Bob Sackett. Mr. Buckley, an ambitious young actor, plays Jack Benedict with a care which commands respect, but the effort would be improved by a fuller exhibition of repose. The slender sketches of the swells are filled out by Marlowe, Lingard and Meakin, and the old men by Bell, Leman and E. N. Thayer, are excellent impersonations, the last-named effect especially distinguishing himself in the grumpy character of Remington, per pere. "Bad Girls," he said of the ladies? It is feared not a dress-coat is more than that the majority of them looked well and dressed extravagantly. Some of them were, indeed, by nature piquant, but the dramatic author gives little to do.....Miss Graham and Miss Tracy were shining examples. Miss Minnie Walton was fresh and sexless as Mrs. Carter, and it should not be forgotten that a minor actress named Mary Chambers drew a slight but good genre picture of an Irish servant girl. On Nov. 14th, 'The Serious Family,' and 'Ireland As It Was,' with Maggie Moore as Judy O'Trot, will be brought forward for production. On Nov. 18th, Mrs. F. S. Chanfrau appears in 'Expiation.'.....At the Metropolitan, Yankee Robinson, who commenced an engagement on the 4th, has been the star attraction to measure audiences. He has appeared in 'Fire-eater,' a nondescript piece, into which mandilla melodrama and somber farce enter in about equal parts. Mr. Robinson was fairly successful in representing a traditional stage Yankee, who bears as much resemblance to the real thing as caricature does to character. The support included Pierpont Thayer, Frank Rea, W. Ellerton, Miss Effie Lazzo, Mrs. Bates and Miss Sallie Hinckley. Mr. J. P. Adams, the veteran comedian, who has lately arrived from Australia, will commence an engagement on the 11th in the drama of 'Warwick.' The gentleman is a brother of the tragedian, Augustus Adams, who, we living, enjoyed great celebrity as a Shakespearean actor.....Mrs. Chanfrau arrived by the overland route from Chicago on the 8th, under engagement to Mr. John McCullough."

JOHN T. RAYMOND, the popular comedian of the Globe Theatre, Boston, Mass., was tendered a complimentary supper by Mr. J. V. Taylor, on Saturday evening, Nov. 18th, prior to his departure to fulfill starring engagements already referred to in the CLIPPER, and was presented with a massive silver pitcher, bearing the following inscription:—"John T. Raymond. Presented at the Globe Theatre, Nov. 16th, 1872."

MANAGERS having open dates are requested to address Barrett Sylvester, care of this office.

THE LINGARD COMEDY COMPANY opened at the Theatre, Richmond, Va., on Nov. 11th. Our correspondent, writing on Nov. 16th, says:—

"They were greeted with a fine house, although the night was unpropitious. 'A Life's Dream' was the opening piece, and the acting of it was all that could be desired. The Mabel Chandler of Miss Alice Dunning Lingard was charming; Miss Dickie Lingard was excellent as Grace Du Platt; the impersonation of the Scarlet Page by Horace Lingard was good, and decidedly amusing; Geo. Dyer as John Babyback also gave us a fine piece of acting, and with a few exceptions the rest of the support gave satisfaction. During the evening Mr. Lingard appeared in his sketches, in which he stands unequaled. 'A Life's Dream' was repeated on the 12th. On the 13th 'A Woman Will Woman' and 'The Day after the Wedding;' the 14th, 'David Garrick.' Although the week has partly been a very bad one, they have drawn good sized audiences. The company will close on the 18th with 'Naval Engagements' and 'A Pretty Piece of Business.' 'A Life's Dream' was repeated for the matinee.....Miss Katie Putnam, with her comedy company, opened at Virginia Hall on the 11th, with the drama, entitled 'The Old Curiosity Shop.' Miss Putnam in the dual character of Little Nell and the Marchioness was immense. Her versatility is wonderful, and acting truly natural. She was called before the curtain after the first act, and applause has greeted her every appearance during the week.....During the fair scene the song and dance, 'The Apple of My Eye,' was rendered in an artistic manner by Miss Putnam and Mr. Browne, and by request it has been repeated several times during the week. Edwin Browne, a promising young actor, as Dick Swiviller, was excellent. Mr. Ryan, as Quilp, was almost perfect. G. W. Morrison, as Sampson Brass, and Mrs. Noah in the dual part of Mrs. Brass and Mrs. Jarley, acted well their parts. We have never seen the play rendered in a more effective manner. The company is small, but, as a whole, excellent. The same bill was repeated the 13th and 15th; on the 14th, 'The Daughter of the Regiment' and the farce 'The Happy Pair.' 'Fanchon' for Miss Putnam's benefit on the 15th, when she was greeted with a full audience. She was ably supported by Mr. Browne, as Landry. 'The Hospital Treasure' and 'The Laughing Hyena' will be the closing bill. 'The Old Curiosity Shop' was repeated for the matinee. Miss Putnam will go hence to Petersburg, and will return to this city the 21st for three nights, opening at Assembly Hall, Virginia Hall having been previously engaged for those nights.....The Chapman Sisters will open at the theatre on Nov. 18th."

MISS MARIAN MORDAUNT commenced a six nights' engagement at the Royal Lyceum, Toronto, Ont., on Nov. 11th, opening in a sensational drama, written for her by T. B. De Walden, entitled "Darling; or, Woman and Her Master," which corresponded to the title on Nov. 15th, says:

"It is as good as the average of modern pieces, and possesses one advantage over most of them, which is that it is not altogether a one part piece. Miss Mordaunt enacted the role of the heroine, Ellen Lane, with excellent taste, and in her several dequises proved herself to be an excellent representative of characters, particularly in her assumption of the Irish and Yankee character. She received efficient support from the several members of the stock company. Allan Halford enacted the role of the chivalrous young southerner, Alfred Kendrick, in a faultless manner, his fine stage appearance being greatly in his favor. J. K. Vernon enacted the role of Corberry Radcliffe, but he did not seem to exert himself as usual, merely delivering the lines without giving them any expression. J. R. Spackman was fair as Jacob Hoffman, but he should not try to assume the Dundreary proclivities, as he utterly fails in the attempt. Frank Tannehill was quite acceptable as the bullying braggart, Col. Delancy Coon. The part of the Rev. Daniel Gaines, though not of much significance, was made a prominent place in the drama by the excellent rendition it received at the hands of W. T. Melville. J. H. Banks did not have much to say, but he raised several smiles during the evening by his antics as Julius, a lively contraband. W. H. Lloyd did very well as the exquisite Mr. Softbrain. Alf. H. Hudson made the most of the brief part of Peter Bowbells. J. L. Saphore delivered the few lines allotted to the part of Mr. Wigsby with much ease. Odell Todd, as the auctioneer Ripper, was guilty of a very nice little piece of acting. Blanche Bradshaw had a rather tame part in Laura Tremaine, and acted it correspondingly; yet her naturally prepossessing appearance was set off by the several neat and tasty costumes which she wore. The role of Mrs. Gentry was cast to Mrs. Bradshaw, but in consequence of her sudden indisposition it was necessary, at short notice, to fill the breach, who did very well under the circumstances. Mrs. Vernon rendered the part of the virago, Mrs. Bowbells, in an unexceptional manner. Her make-up was also quite original. Connie Hamilton was thoroughly satisfactory in the part of Mary; but her acting would be far more enjoyable if she would pay more attention to those on the stage and less to the audience. The Misses Whitney and Ward were also satisfactory as the two girls, Tilly and Lillie. 'Darling' attracted large audiences until Friday evening, when, for her benefit, Miss Mordaunt appeared before a crowded house as Mabel Vandaleur in her new drama entitled 'Heaps of Money,' which will be repeated at the matinee and evening performances on Saturday to good business. On the 18th E. T. Stetson is to commence an engagement."

AMUSEMENTS IN CHICAGO, ILL., are reported as follows by our correspondent, writing on Nov. 18th:—

"With perhaps one exception—the Academy of Music—the attendance at our several places of amusement has been unusually slim since my last report. Miss Maggie Mitchell continues in 'Fanchon,' at Wood's Theatre, to fair houses. Miss Mitchell is finely acted by both star and the stock company, and is most assuredly deserving of a much better attendance. The Pearl of Savoy' will be presented on the 18th.....The Abbott-Kirsly troupe are doing a light business at Hooley's Opera House. The current week's bill of fare consists of 'The Italian Brigands' and 'Humpty Dumpty,' both plays being enacted in the most satisfactory manner. This week is the last of their engagement to a close on the 16th. They open at the Academy of Music, Pittsburgh, Pa., on the 25th, for one week. On the 18th John Allen, Little Mac and Miss Alice Harrison, supported by Alabama Carlotta's dramatic company, will commence a limited engagement. R. M. Hooley and J. W. Blaisdell started for the east yesterday to engage a regular dramatic company for the season, which they hope to commence about the 1st of December. R. M. Hooley is to be sole proprietor and manager. J. W. Blaisdell and J. C. Padgett, associate managers.....Mr. G. L. Fox and his famous pantomime troupe are receiving golden opinions at Aiken's Theatre, but, sad to say, the business thus far this week is far below what it should be. 'Humpty Dumpty' continues the all important attraction, and, as played by this company, ought to fill the house to overflowing. The extra features are about the same as last week, and are really of a first class nature. The 'Cat Duet,' by Mons. Martens and Mlle Gretchen, is among the most prominent features, and is nightly re-demanded.....The Black Crook' is in its second week at the Academy of Music, and though not attracting as large houses as the past week, the attendance continues good; in fact, but few seats can be obtained after the curtain is up. Miss Blanchfield closed his engagement on the 13th, and last evening John Webster assumed the part of Rudolph in a highly satisfactory manner. The piece is now going along as smoothly as clock work, and everything is working harmoniously. The Meech Brothers have disposed of the piece and paraphernalia to Messrs. Carle, Langrishe and Howard, who take the same to Providence, R. I., thence through the east. Miss Charlotte Thompson opens in her play of 'One Wife' on the 18th. Mr. J. L. Carhart assumes the stage management on the 18th.....The Peak Family Bell Ringers are to give a sacred concert evening next week in the Field"—As soon as the news reached here of the great fire at Boston, Manager Gardner, with his usual courtesy and energy, proposed a benefit at once for the Boston sufferers. The Meech Brothers gave the use right of the piece, and many others volunteered their services for the benefit, which took place on Tuesday afternoon, netting $225."

JOHN T. RAYMOND, who may be classed amongst the best comedians upon the American stage at the present time, has, by care and attention to business, raised himself to an exalted position in the opinion of the critics of Boston, Mass., in which city he has acted during the past two seasons, at the Globe Theatre. Having obtained a few months' leave of absence, he has arranged for a brief series of star engagements, and during a portion of that time will act at the California Theatre, San Francisco, Cal., where, for several seasons, he held the position of leading comedian, and met with high favor both from the press and public. He will commence his tour with an engagement at the Varieties Theatre, New Orleans, La. Mr. Raymond is a thorough artist, possessing great facial expression, a humorous vein of dry wit, a fund of humor, and certain magnetic powers which apparently permeate his audiences, placing them at once in sympathy with himself. He is neither addicted to "mugging" nor grimacing, but is content with presenting a natural embodiment of his own quaint conception of the character represented, and the best deserved compliment which we can pay him is, that the art by which he accomplishes his effects is almost entirely concealed. During the recent engagement of Mr. Sothern at the Globe Theatre, terminating on Nov. 9th, Mr. Raymond acted in the same plays, and we extract from the various newspapers of that city the following opinions of his artistic abilities:—

Mr. Sothern is supported very well at the Globe. Mr. Raymond plays Asa Trenchard with rare humor and intelligence, giving one of the best impersonations of the character which has been known to the American stage.—Daily Advertiser.

Mr. Raymond making the Yankee much more a possibility than most delineators of the part.—Daily Journal.

Mr. Raymond's Asa Trenchard was a studied and perfect representation, and fairly divided the honors with the star of the evening.—Evening Traveller.

Mr. Raymond as Asa Trenchard was fresh, spirited and humorous, and, at the same time, without undue exaggeration.—Daily Globe.

Mr. Raymond's Asa Trenchard was quite out of the course of the conventional stage Yankee with his nasal twang. In Mr. Raymond's artistic interpretation, "Cousin" was a creation of original humorist, but not a vulgar blunderer. Possibly a general audience would not find in Mr. Raymond's rendering so many eye-tickling effects as in the coarser characterizations of Mr. Warren and Mr. Wheatleigh. With inimitable discretion and fidelity to nature Mr. Raymond's performance should be ranked beyond any previous interpretation the part has had here. The actor's opportunity for developing and perfecting his study of the character was afforded Monday evening, when it appeared with Mr. Sothern in the piece when first produced in New York, and also in the famous Paris season, and in several subsequent engagements with Mr. Sothern.—The Commercial.

Mr. Raymond's effort was distinguished by great merit in conception and expression. * * * In "Brother Sam" Mr. Sothern was again very well supported, especially by Mr. Raymond, who, as Jonathan Rumbelow, a Birmingham manufacturer, developed new powers of humorous expression, and delighted his audience beyond measure.—Commercial Bulletin.

In the support, Mr. Raymond had the chief place in Mr. Rumbelow, a type of the peppery stage-farce uncle, which the gentleman played with a distinctness and unusual prominence as a fine piece of character acting.—The Commonwealth.

We accept Mr. Rumblelow, which was performed by Mr. Raymond with rare humor. It was a capital and striking bit of character acting, and gave a very favorable idea of the versatility of Mr. Raymond, who, by the way, has been seen too seldom of late.—The Globe.

Mr. Raymond gave a splendid impersonation of the old uncle, and fairly divided the honors with Mr. Sothern in some scenes.—Daily Journal.

He was ably assisted by the company, notably by Mr. Raymond, whose impersonation of Jonathan Rumblelow was not inferior to Mr. Sothern's rendering of the principal part.—Boston Post.

Mr. Raymond assumed the part of a crusty, vulgar, warm hearted and choleric old tradesman from Birmingham, and his acting was full of admirable variety, ingenuity and humor being at times so droll as to detract attention from Mr. Sothern's more quiet performance.—Daily Advertiser.

Mr. Raymond's Uncle Rumblelow is a wonderfully realistic piece of acting, and in the make up was perfect. This artist never slights a character, and it is always a pleasure to chronicle the appreciation his assumptions receive from his auditors. As a character artist and for versatility, Mr. Raymond has few equals in America.—Evening Traveller.

Mr. Raymond's Asa Trenchard was capital in its quiet naturalness and its utter freedom from exaggeration.....In Mr. Raymond, as Jonathan Rumblelow, the peppery and suspicious uncle who is the cause of all Sam's troubles, gave a remarkably strong piece of character acting, and fairly shared with Mr. Sothern the honors of the evening. Mr. Raymond is assuredly one of the most versatile and excellent of comedians. He is never led into over-acting, even under the greatest temptation. It is to be regretted that managers are so much the slaves of system, as a rule, is almost inexorable in the persistency with which it "shelves" the best artists of a stock company, and keeps them in the background. * * * Raymond again distinguished himself as a blunt and ill-bred bodily of a squire, in which he displayed an originality and a dry humor that were very striking.—Saturday Evening Gazette.

THE MOBILE THEATRES, Mobile, Ala., can be rented for a few vacant dates, or combinations can secure it on sharing terms, through D. Bidwell, who advertises. A first class attraction is also wanted for the holidays.

LAWRENCE BARRETT, during his engagement at Wood's Theatre, Cincinnati, O., seems to have achieved as great success as had attended his previous engagements in other cities during the present season. We cut from a newspaper published in that city the following:—

THE RICHELIEU OF BARRETT.—"Richelieu" was the attraction at Wood's Theatre last night, and with Mr. Lawrence Barrett in the title role proved sufficient to draw a large audience. Barrett, who, by-the-way, has risen to fame and fortune since the period that it is time to drop given names and titles, and to speak of him as we do of Forrest or Booth or Adams, gives us as good a Cardinal Richelieu as any one living, except Forrest. His personal than ..... [illegible] ..... and his conception of the character, while equally successful in reading, in costuming and in make-up. The full musical undertones of this actor we first noticed in his version of "Enoch Arden," where he read the closely followed language of Tennyson with an eloquence rare upon the stage. He was then full of a promise, which has risened under the sun of hard work and professional devotion toward the fulfillment of every year, until we now find him, hardly yet having reached his prime, rivaling the first actors of the age. He awoke the audience last night to enthusiasm in every famous scene, and in that wonderfully dramatic close of the fourth act brought out all the terrible power of the language and the scene, which is saying volumes. The curtain fell upon the act amid a perfect storm of applause.

Musical.

SPAULDING'S BELL RINGERS are billed to perform at Fitzwilliam, Mass., Winchendon, Peterboro', Jaffrey, Ashburnham and Fitchburg.

THE WORCESTER CHORAL UNION, Carl Zerrahn, conductor, gave the oratorio of "Elijah," at Music Hall, Providence, R. I., on Nov. 14th.

MR. WILLIAM HAWKINS, aged 54 years, a member of the wealthy jewelry manufacturing firm of Carter, Hawkins & Dodd, of Newark, N. J., is reported to have eloped last week with Miss Mattie Lynch, a young lady of considerable musical talent, who for two or three years has been very popular with Newark audiences.

RUBENSTEIN and his concert company are billed ahead as follows:—Elmira, N. Y., Nov. 22d; Rochester, 23d; Buffalo, 25th; Cleveland, O., 27th and 28th; Columbus, 29th; Dayton, 30th, and Chicago, Ill., one week, commencing Dec. 2d.

AN ALTO VOCALIST is wanted by John Hooley, who advertises.

H. E. MOORE, who can be addressed as per advertisement, wants a pianist.

SMITH'S BELL RINGERS and Charley Harrison, humorist, performed at Sullivan, Ill., Nov. 13th; Windsor, 14th; Effingham, 15th; Mason, 16th, and are billed at Flora, 18th, and Olney, 19th.

THE HOLMAN OPERA TROUPE performed at Elmira, N. Y., Nov. 14th, 15th and 16th.

THE AIMEE OPERA BOUFFE TROUPE commenced a week's season at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, on 18th inst., presenting the operas of "La Grande Duchesse," "Barbe Bleue," "Genevieve De Brabant" (in which M'lle Bonelli made her debut in Philadelphia), "Petit Faust," "La Perichole," and "La Belle Helene." The attendance during the week was remarkably good, and M'lle Aimee in her various rotes met with a very enthusiastic reception.

PROF. L. L. CLARK gave a concert at Musical Fund Hall, Philadelphia, on the 16th inst., on which occasion he performed on a new musical instrument, invented by himself, in which both the piano and harp are combined.

THE SECOND OF Carl Wolfsohn's orchestral matinees took place on the 16th inst., at Horticultural Hall, Philadelphia, when Messrs. E. Letebvre and R. H. Stratford performed solos on the saxophone and harp, in conjunction with the orchestra of 44 musicians.

THEO. THOMAS'S ORCHESTRA, assisted by Mr. George L. Osgood, tenor; Miss Anna Mehlig, pianist; and Mr. Bernhard Listemann, violinist; will give concerts at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, on the evenings of the 19th, 20th, 22d and 23d of November, and at a matinee on the last mentioned date.

MISS JENNIE SULLIVAN, a favorite Cincinnati soprano, being about to remove permanently to New York, took a complimentary benefit at Pike's Opera House, in that city, on the 14th. She had a fine house, and was assisted by the Cincinnati Quartet Club, her brother, T. J. Sullivan, Miss Anna Dunphy and other amateur talent. Miss Sullivan is sister to the late Charley Sullivan.

THE STRAKOSCH TROUPE concertizes at Pike's Opera House, Cincinnati, on the 20th and 22d.

THE RAILSBACK CONCERT TROUPES are billed for one concert at Hodge Opera House, Lockport, N. Y., on Nov. 19th. The members of the troupe are Mrs. H. M. Smith, soprano; Miss A. R. Clark, contralto; Mr. W. H. Fessenden, tenor; Mr. H. C. Barnabee, basso, and Mr. M. Arbuckle, cornet soloist.

AT THE CALIFORNIA THEATRE, San Francisco, Cal., the Fabbri Troupe sang in "L'Africane," on Nov. 5th, 7th and 10th, to immense audiences. The opera was produced in a glittering scenic dress, and rendered better than ever before in California. The cast comprised M'me Fabbri as Selica, Annie Elzar as Ines, Signor Baccei as Vasco di Gama, Herr Muller as Nelusco, Mons. Charles as Don Alvar, Herr Castle as Don Pedro, Signor Bonicori as Pedro, and Herr Rethwisch as Grand Inquisitor. They were to close last week with "Lucia" and "L'Elixir d'Amour."

THEODORE THOMAS opens with his orchestra in Music Hall, Boston, Mass., on Nov. 29th, and the proceeds of the first concert will be given to the relief fund for the sufferers by the fire.....Organ concerts are given every Wednesday and Saturday in the room of Music Hall on the great organ.....The Howard Symphony Concerts—the second of the series—will take place on Thursday next in Music Hall, when Mlle. Therese Liebe will take part.....The New England Conservatory of Music gives a concert to-morrow afternoon in Music Hall.....Mr. Peck's concerts, postponed from last month in consequence of the horse epidemic, will come off on Friday and Saturday of this week, when are Charles Moulton, Addie Phillips, F. C. Packard, S. B. Mills, Howard M. Dow and the Beethoven Quartet Club appear, we are informed by our correspondent, who wrote on the 17th inst.

THEODORE THOMAS and his orchestra concertized at Ford's Grand Opera House, Baltimore, Md., on every evening of the past week, with the exception of Friday.

MLLE. AIMEE and her Bouffe company will appear at the Grand Opera House, Baltimore, Md., during the week beginning Nov. 18th.

A GRAND CHARITY CONCERT is to be given at the Concordia Opera House, Baltimore, Md., on Nov. 26th, under the direction of Signor Antonio Baril.

THE STRETTONIAN FAMILY, vocalists, and Miss Winnetta Montague, dramatic reader, are to appear at Tweddle Hall, Albany, N. Y., on Nov. 19th, for the complimentary benefit of H. L. Gladding, formerly secretary of the Y. M. C. A.

MLLE. CAMILLO URSO will commence on Nov. 20th a series of three concerts at the Exposition Hall, New Orleans, La., with an assisting constellation of stars, including whom Mme. Comes, who is reported to be a vocalist of wonderful ability, will make her debut in a concert room.

OLE BULL, assisted by Mrs. Grazella Ridgway, Signor Farranta and Mr. J. N. Patterson, are to give two concerts at Assembly Hall, Richmond, Va., Nov. 19th and 20th.

A VIOLINIST who can lead a brass band, a cornet, an alto and a piccolo player, are wanted by Ben F. Bowen, who advertises.

THE CHORAL SOCIETY of Washington, D. C., assisted by Mme. Rudersdorff, soprano; Alice Fairman, contralto; Teresa Liebe, violinist; and Nelson Varley, tenor; are to give concerts at Lincoln Hall in that city on Nov. 23d and 25th.

Variety Halls.

LADY VOCALISTS and danseuses are wanted for the Variety Theatre, Scranton, Pa. See advertisement.

THE BENSONS, Jennie and la petite, are at present at Trimble's Varieties, Pittsburgh, Pa., where their agent, James Fish, can be addressed.

VARIETY TALENT is advertised for for Broom's Opera House, Memphis, Tenn.

SADI D'JALMA, contortionist, who has just concluded a season's engagement with John O'Brien's Circus, can be addressed care of this office by managers desiring to engage her.

FRANK KENT, burlesque artist, advertises that he can be engaged.

ANNIE E. HAZLETON publishes a card in another column, offering to swing Indian clubs with Millie Clark, and deposits in our hands twenty-five dollars, which she requests that lady to cover.

PERFORMERS are wanted for the Fifth Street Opera House, Terre Haute, Ind. Address as per advertisement.

KANSAS CITY, MO., VARIETY AFFAIRS are reported as being lively by our correspondent, who wrote on Nov. 13th as follows:—"At the Walnut Street Theatre brimming houses have been the rule. The new people appearing are the Favorite Brothers, Kathleen O'Neil, Lizzie Shelton, Gen. Grant, Jr., and Tom Murray, an Irish singer of more than ordinary ability, who received a cordial welcome. The principal attraction in the olio is the Sanyeahs, Maud and Samuel, in their leap for life, and the muscular Samuel in a flying ring act. B. C. Hart and Bonnie Nelson depart for St. Louis, Nov. 14th. The olio is made up by J. Carr, Maggie Leslie, Marie Roscelle, F. Ritchie and Ella Sylvester. Nothing new announced."

BILLY ALLEN is in Pittsburgh, Pa., organizing a traveling combination for the winter season.

GEO. M. COLE advertises for a bass vocalist, a lady ballet, and a gentleman and lady team, the winter season.

AT TOOKER'S VARIETIES, Norfolk, Va., the chief attractions of the past week were: Johnny Brassell, Ethiopian, Dutch and Irish comedian; Tommy Sheridan, Harry Jefferson, Millie Bertie, in statues; Millie Carolista, tight rope artist; Miss Emma Marsh, Zoe De Forrest and Millie Leoline. Miss Sallie St. Clair, dancer, appeared on the 14th inst.

MORTIMER'S VARIETIES, Philadelphia, presented an attractive and varied programme last week, which appeared to afford entire satisfaction to a succession of large audiences. Harry Causland, clown, and Allen and Ward, song and dance men, were the only new faces. Harry Causland appeared in an original act entitled "Novelty," in which he performed on a great variety of musical instruments in a manner that elicited much applause, and he proved an immense hit. Allen and Ward did not come up to expectation in their songs and dances. The Female Minstrels continued as popular as ever, Miss Mary Frazer singing "Whip-poor-will" in a pleasing manner. The sensational drama of "The Wrecker's Fate" by E. B. Radcliffe an opportunity for some effective acting. Gaylord, the contortionist; John De Angelis, comedian, and Ward and Allen, closed on the 16th inst. John and Maggie Fielding in their protean sketches, and Miss Lydia Webster, club swinger, commence engagements on the 18th inst. Miss Kate Fisher will appear next week, in "Mazeppa," and Miss Polly Dale, a semi-comic vocalist, will also commence an engagement on the same date.

AT THE GARDEN MUSIC HALL, Third street, above Girard avenue, Philadelphia, the fresh attractions during the past week were George Kurtz in his capital Dutch will meet you on March 1st, 1873, at New York City. I would meet you immediately, but I have had fever and ague for the past three months, with but little hope of breaking it up soon. As I am entirely dependent on the proceeds of my engagements, I can put up but $150 to $300, but will swing for that and the Championship a heavier pair of clubs, with more grace and different motions, making due allowance for the difference in our weight of clubs, according to the difference in our height and weight, which I learn is several inches in height, and several pounds in weight.

MISS MILLIE CLARK.—I

IF YOU MEAN BUSINESS, COVER $25 at Clipper Office, and remainder will be there on time.

* * * * Its accoustics are excellent, and M'lle Nilsson and all the members of my troupe are very much pleased with it. Yours, very truly, MAX STRAKOSCH.

* * * * * You have certainly given the Columbus people the best furnished and finished stage and appointments they have ever seen in their own city, while the auditorium must prove as advantageous respecting capacity sight, ventilation, warmth, &c., as any community can desire. Yours, truly, JOHN A. ELLSLER.

* * * * * If I should again visit Columbus, I should most assuredly endeavor to play in your house again. The situation is most excellent, and in every way desirable for a first class entertainment. Yours, very sincerely, MARK SMITH.

* * * * * I take great pleasure in recommending the new Athenæum as being infinitely the best Theatre, both as regards location and accessories, in the city of Columbus, having given both houses a fair and impartial trial. Our business here consider immense. Yours, sincerely,
FRANK P. DOBSON Manager Wallace Sisters

* * * * * Its seating capacity and voluminous stock of scenery are all that one could wish, and most cheerfully recommend it to any and all managers of first class combinations who may in the future wish to visit your beautiful city, as a most complete theatre in every respect.
